Mayor Emery Petersen waits for the final precincts to report at Twin Falls City Hall

McClusky, Carr, Vickers to council

By ANNETTE CARY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Incumbent Mary McClusky swept to an easy victory for a third term on the Twin Falls City Council, but Mayor Emery Petersen did not win enough votes Tuesday to be re-elected.

Joining McClusky on the council will be political newcomers Rick Carr, manager of an insurance firm, and Jim Vickers, a business owner and former city fire battalion chief.

McClusky received 3,230 votes, Carr had 2,747 and Vickers had 2,280.

Retired Twin Falls fire chief Bobby Bopp came in fourth with 1,864 votes and Petersen ran a close fifth with 1,832 votes. Sixth place went to Ernie Vasquez, making his second run for council, with 981 votes; and seventh place was held by retired city fire marshal Fred Higgins with 931 votes. Teacher Ernie Wallen with 623 votes and handyman Donald McMurrian with 393 votes ran eighth and ninth.

Some 5,139 people cast ballots on the separate swimming pool bond issue, or about twice as many as voted in the 1983 pool election, which also shared a ballot with a council election.

Combined county and city voter rolls meant that there were more than twice as many people — 13,094 — registered to vote in this election. The number of voters casting ballots in the council election was not available at press time.

Petersen said, "There are a lot of reasons, (why I did not win), but I'd say whoever is mayor has a difficult time avoiding criticism, especially when they take strong stands as I have."

He said he still thought the stands he took in his 4½ years on the council and 4½ years on the City Planning and Zoning Commission were the ones in the best interests of the community, however.

He took stands in favor of police and fire consolidation, saying it saved taxpayers $100,000 a year, and in favor of private management of the sewage treatment facility. He has also been outspoken on the enforcement of fire safety codes, saying sometimes city inspectors have been needlessly strict in their enforcement.

Petersen also mentioned "very critical stands from the newspaper editorial staff" as contributing to his loss.

Four years ago Petersen came in first in the council election, and McClusky was second.

Vickers termed his election "a backlash against the present council" on the police and fire consolidation issue.

"I tried to run an open campaign. I say what I believe, and I think the people were looking for something like that," the businessman and former fireman said.

Vickers was an outspoken opponent of the city's Public Safety Department, in which the fire and police departments were consolidated. He believes the vote shows the people agree with him that consolidation is not working and not saving money.

"I will be the opposing viewpoint (on the council), but I think I am the most knowledgeable about the (consolidation) issue. I worked under it. I know where the loop holes are," he said.

McClusky, contacted at home with her family Tuesday night, was surprised that she received hundreds of votes more than any other candidates.

"I'm so delighted and happy and so want to continue working for the people," she said. She added that she hoped the votes she received were "because of my work and not because I'm the only lady on the council."

McClusky has served on the council for 8½ years, voting in opposition to the majority of the council more often than any other member.

Carr attributed his win to "not having made any mistakes politically in the past." However, in the next four years he was sure he would take some positions that some voters will consider mistakes, he said.

Twin Falls voters sink swimming pool bond for fourth time

By ANNETTE CARY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Another bond election for a city swimming pool has failed, becoming the city's fourth unsuccessful attempt to raise the money for a city pool.

This time the vote was more definitive, with 38 percent of the voters opposing the $700,000 bond. Some 1,947 voters opposed the plan, while 3,192 voted in favor of it. A two-thirds majority was needed for passage.

"Can you print tears?" asked Councilman John Peterson in response to a request for a statement. "I'm sick about the pool."

Swimming pool
Yes	3,192
No	1,947

"I can't believe the community will not support a pool for future generations," Councilman Gale Kleinkopf said.

Councilman Erik Andersen, who served on a council pool committee with Peterson and Kleinkopf, said that four failures should be a good indication of the wishes of the people.

He and Peterson said they saw no realistic alternatives now for financing the pool without a bond election. Just about the only way Twin Falls is likely to get a large outdoor pool would be if a private investor opens and operates one for profit, Andersen said.

Peterson said that the pool proposal may have done better in two earlier elections because voters felt more secure about the condition of the local agricultural economy and the national economy then.

Support for the pool was particularly low in Precinct 4, which includes South Park, with only 51 percent of the voters supporting it. The only precincts to pass the bond issue were Precinct 6, with 71.4 percent of the voters in favor, and Precinct 7, with 70.7 percent in favor.

The plan turned down Tuesday was identical to the one voters turned down by less than 10 votes seven months ago. It called for passage of a $700,000 bond, to be supplemented with $500,000 set aside by the council in past budget years for constructing a pool.

Two earlier votes also failed.

The first — in 1983 — was not approved, City Manager Tom Courtney says, because the bond counsel for the election ruled that two-thirds of those voting had to be in favor. Those who cast a ballot in the council race but cast no vote for the bond election essentially were counted as voting against the pool.

Consequently, even though 69.7 of the votes cast for the pool were in favor of the bond, only 65.8 percent of the total ballots cast for council candidates and the bond issue favored the pool.

That problem was solved in Tuesday's election by having voters cast separate ballots, on separate voting machines, in the pool bond and council elections.

Hansen's legal fight heads for high court

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Former Idaho Congressman George Hansen, undaunted by his latest loss in the legal battle with the U.S. Department of Justice over his 1984 four-count felony conviction, is maintaining he will still be vindicated once his case reaches the nation's highest court.

In the wake of the refusal to hear his appeal by the full U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, Hansen said Tuesday that he will file an appeal with the U.S. Supreme Court within the month.

"It always has been the anticipation that this is something that had to go to the Supreme Court," Hansen said. "We feel we're right, and we feel that when we get to the proper level and can get an objective look at the facts, we'll have this matter resolved in our way."

The 10-member appellate court rejected without comment the flamboyant Republican's request that it review the unanimous decision in August of its three-judge panel upholding Hansen's conviction and five-to-15-month prison term.

Hansen, 54, who is now working in Washington and leading a new campaign aimed at curbing the power of the Internal Revenue Service, was convicted in April 1984 on four counts of failing to report more than $333,000 in loans and other financial transactions on required federal financial disclosure statements.

He was sentenced to the prison term and fined $40,000 but has charged the Justice Department and the IRS, in a vendetta against him, overstepped their authority under federal law. He has consistently claimed, and has received the bipartisan backing of more than 300 incumbent House members, that the 1978 law requiring personal financial disclosure never contemplated criminal prosecution of members of Congress who failed to fully comply.

"What you have here is a handful of judges who presume to tell hundreds of congressmen what they intended when the act was passed," Hansen said. "A lot of them are incensed to think the

Mormon leader Kimball dies at age 90

By VERN ANDERSON
The Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — Spencer W. Kimball, the president and prophet of the Mormon Church since 1973 and one of its most energetic leaders until age and infirmity curtailed his ministry, died late Tuesday night. He was 90.

Kimball died at 10:08 p.m. MST at his Westin Hotel Utah apartment of causes incident to age, said church spokesman Don LeFevre. He said Kimball's wife, Camilla, and a nurse were with him at the time.

LeFevre said he had no other details on the death and funeral arrangements were pending. He said Gordon B. Hinckley, Kimball's second counselor in the governing First Presidency, had been notified.

Kimball, the 12th "prophet, seer and revelator" of the 5.8 million-member Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, had been in a weakened state since surgery Sept. 5, 1981 — his third operation in two years to drain blood and fluid from between his skull and brain — and was mostly confined to his apartment.

Still, he attended most semi-annual church conferences in recent years and rarely missed a weekly meeting in the Salt Lake Temple of the faith's governing First Presidency and Council of the Twelve Apostles. Kimball was last seen in public at the Oct. 6, 1985, semi-annual conference of the church, which he did not address.

During Kimball's final years, day-to-day church affairs were administered by Hinckley. The first counselor in the First Presidency, Marion G. Romney, 88, is infirm and confined to his home.

Church presidents serve for life and are the product of an apostolic succession within the Council of the Twelve. If tradition holds, that body's president and most senior member, former U.S. Agriculture Secretary Ezra Taft Benson, 86, will succeed Kimball once a pro forma vote of the Twelve is taken.

Though plagued by health problems, Kimball tirelessly administered the most significant changes since pioneer days in the largest and wealthiest church founded in America.

As president, Kimball allowed blacks to hold the Mormon priesthood, retired elderly church leaders, added the first non-Americans to the modern church hierarchy and consolidated all Sunday church meetings into a three-hour block.

Sailor, soldier, spy erode confidence

Analysis

WASHINGTON — Under the best of circumstances, creating a positive environment for a superpower summit is no easy task, but that challenge has become more difficult because of several unforeseeable events — involving a Soviet sailor, soldier and spy.

The friendly overtures the United States and the Soviet Union have made toward each other over the past two weeks have, in some cases, been overshadowed by the curious behavior exhibited by the Soviet protagonists in each of the events.

The most astonishing case involves Vitaly Yurchenko, a former top KGB official who claimed Monday that he was kidnapped on a Rome street last August and taken unconscious to the United States where he spent "three horrible months" until he escaped from his alleged captors last Saturday. The State Department has dismissed Yurchenko's account as a fabrication.

U.S. officials, speaking privately, say they believe that Soviet officials themselves are aware that Yurchenko's story is groundless but are going along with it because of its immense propaganda value, particularly for the summit.

When President Reagan raises human rights as an issue at the summit, Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev can reply by recounting Yurchenko's tale of "torture" and "barbarism," he claims to have suffered at the hands of American authorities, the officials said.

Thus, the Yurchenko affair does not add up to a pre-summit confidence builder.

Less momentous was the case involving a Soviet soldier, Alexsandr Vasilyevich Sukhanov, who meekly turned himself over to the custody of the Soviet ambassador in Afghanistan on Monday after spending the previous four days holed up at the American Embassy there.

Although the episode ended peacefully, it did leave a residue of recriminations. In a bid to force the U.S. hand, the Afghan government had

Order chief tried to regroup

SEATTLE (AP) — Even the fiery death of the founder of The Order failed to cool the ardor of the Nazi-like group's fugitive security chief, who tried to get members to regroup, a former member testified Tuesday.

Randall Eugene Rader, who organized a training camp and taught survival skills, said he rejected the move by Richard E. Scutari because "I knew it wasn't possible."

In his third day of testimony in the federal racketeering trial of 10 accused Order members, Rader, 34, of West Plains, Mo., said he was returning from a land-buying trip to Missouri when he learned that founder Robert J. Mathews had died last Dec. 8.

Mathews died in a fire that destroyed his waterfront hideout on Whidbey Island, north of Seattle, after a 37-hour standoff with the FBI.

Chilean police arrest scores

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Police fought running battles with demonstrators for several hours Tuesday at the beginning of a two-day protest against 12 years of military rule. Four people were reported wounded by gunfire and more than 100 arrested.

News reports and Roman Catholic Church sources said other people were injured, some by buckshot from police shotguns, but no figures were available.

Police said two men, a boy and a teen-age girl were shot in confusing circumstances in separate incidents in suburban working class districts. The report said the assailants were not known.

Police reported that more than 100 people were arrested in the demonstrations, which lasted well into the night.

At 10:22 p.m. local time, the capital city of 5 million people was blacked out, as well as the area 55 miles around it.

Army selects phone suppliers

WASHINGTON (AP) — A multibillion-dollar international competition to supply the U.S. Army with a new combat telephone system came to a close Tuesday with the selection of a team of contractors consisting of a French firm and the U.S.-based GTE Corp.

Army Undersecretary James R. Ambrose said the service had selected a group headed by Thomson-CSF of France as the "preferred supplier" over another group led by the Plessey Co. of Great Britain.

The deal will ultimately be worth about $4.3 billion to the Thomson-GTE team, Ambrose said, making it one of the largest Pentagon contracts ever awarded to a foreign concern.

Thomas Mattausch, a GTE spokesman in Stamford, Conn., said about 75 percent of the actual production work would be performed in the United States, and that his firm was "very pleased" with the Army's decision.

Joint excavation set Nov. 18

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Vietnam and the United States will begin Nov. 18 their first joint excavation for remains of Americans missing since the Vietnam War, a Vietnamese Embassy spokesman said Tuesday.

The first operation will take place at a site near the Vietnamese capital of Hanoi where a U.S. Air Force B-52 bomber crashed, said the spokesman, who declined to be indentified.

The excavation is to be carried out by Vietnam's Office for Seeking Missing Personnel and the U.S. Joint Casualty Resolution Center. Both offices are entrusted with resolving the fates of 1,811 American servicemen and civilians reported missing in Vietnam.

Shuttle crew to return today

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Space shuttle Challenger's international crew of eight packed up Tuesday for their landing in California, but five of the astronauts face more intensive medical tests on the ground after the end of the science mission.

Mission commander Henry Hartsfield and pilot Steven Nagel, assisted by astronaut James Buchli, will guide the stubby-winged shuttle to a landing at 10:44 a.m. MST today on a dry lakebed runway at Edwards Air Force Base.

Officials in West Germany, which paid NASA $64 million to carry the experiments into orbit, called the mission "highly successful" and predicted that 90 to 95 percent of all of the science studies would be completed.

Probe turns to phone records

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Federal investigators have reportedly subpoenaed the long-distance telephone records of Shannon Patrick Flynn, an acquaintance of Mark Hofmann, the man police have identified as the prime suspect in two fatal bombings last month.

In its Tuesday editions the Deseret News quoted an unidentified man as saying he had been questioned by U.S. Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms agents who claimed the investigators had told him Flynn's long-distance records for the past several months had been subpoenaed.

Seaman's wrists found slit

WASHINGTON (AP) — American doctors who examined a Soviet seaman who twice had jumped ship near New Orleans found that the young man's wrists had been slit, a State Department official testified Tuesday.

The discovery was made after seaman Miroslav Medvid had left the ship a third time for interviews with U.S. officials who wanted to determine whether he wanted to defect, according to William W. Woessner, acting assistant secretary of state for European affairs.

Virginia voters elect Baliles governor; Kean retains post

By DAVID ESPO
The Associated Press

Gerald L. Baliles was elected governor of Virginia on Tuesday, keying a historic Democratic sweep that gave the Old Dominion its first black and first woman in statewide office.

New Jersey Republican Gov. Thomas Kean romped to re-election with a landslide that gave the GOP sway in the new State Assembly. In featured off-year municipal contests, Houston Mayor Kathy Whitmire won handily in a tough re-election campaign in which AIDS was an issue and Democratic Mayor Ed Koch of New York swept to third terms.

Detroit's Coleman Young, a heavy favorite, held a growing lead in his try for a fourth term. But six-term Miami Mayor Maurice Ferre, running against 10 rivals, slipped into second place behind Raul Masvidal, and a runoff appeared likely.

On a night generally kind to the incumbents, Cleveland's GOP Mayor George Voinovich won two more years in office, while the first black mayor of Charlotte, N.C., Democrat Harvey Gantt, was re-elected, as well.

Incumbents Don Fraser in Minneapolis, George Latimer of St. Paul, Richard Caliguiri of Pittsburgh, Thirman Milner of Hartford, Conn., and Terry Goddard of Phoenix, Ariz., won fresh terms. In Louisville, Ky., Democrat Jerry Abramson was elected mayor for the first time.

In an advisory opinion in Bristol, Conn., voters endorsed Supreme Court rulings upholding the right to abortion. Washington, D.C., residents approved stiffer rent controls in another of the dozens of local issues that sprinkled the ballot.

Despite the presence of hundreds of local candidates on the ballot, it was the races in New Jersey and Virginia that were scoured for signs of a national trend, and there was enough encouragement for both sides to claim success.

Kean, elected in New Jersey by the narrowest of margins four years ago, was leading in all 21 counties over Democrat Peter Shapiro. The Republican Wyatt B. Durrette to succeed outgoing Democratic Gov. Charles Robb in a race the Democrats touted in advance as evidence of recovery from Reagan's 49-state re-election sweep a year ago.

With 95 percent of precincts counted, Baliles had 704,874, or 55 percent, to Durrette's 570,670, or 45 percent.

State Sen. Douglas Wilder, the grandson of a slave, narrowly defeated GOP State Sen. John Chichester in the race to become lieutenant governor. Democratic Del. Mary Sue Terry was elected attorney general, swamping Republican Del. W.R. "Buster" O'Brien to complete the party's sweep.

Whitmire, completing her second term as Houston's mayor, beat 55-year-old Louis Welch, a former five-term mayor who made AIDS a campaign issue. Welch, speaking into what he thought was a closed microphone, joked before one scheduled television interview that one way to rid the city of the disease was to "shoot the queers."

In Miami's hard-fought city hall race, Ferre trailed Cuban-born Masvidal, a banker, but both men were well below the 50 percent needed to avoid a runoff — that would be held next Tuesday.

In contrast, the 60-year-old Koch, who became a best-selling author during his current term, was gaining over 75 percent of the vote to win a third term in New York. The opposition came from Republican Diane McGrath and City Council President Carol Bellamy, running as the Liberal Party candidate after losing to the mayor in a Democratic primary.

KATHY WHITMIRE
Wins handily at Houston

GOP victory was sweetened when Republicans gained control of the State Assembly for the first time since 1972.

The GOP state and national parties poured more than $1.5 million into a well-organized effort to reverse the Democrats' current 44-36 assembly majority and bolster their claim of a nationwide political realignment. Democratic Speaker Alan Karcher said it appeared his party would lose between eight and 14 seats.

Kean accepted telephoned congratulations from President Reagan and Vice President George Bush, and told cheering supporters, "Our cause is building pride in New Jersey, and our record and this victory speaks for that."

Shapiro, a 33-year-old Essex County executive, conceded a "doozy" of a loss, and the vote count agreed.

With 84 percent of the precincts tallied, it was Kean 1,128,777, or 70 percent, to 480,552, or 30 percent for Shapiro.

Camas Prairie, Hailey and the Lower Wood River Valley:
Cloudy with periods of light rain or snow mainly over the mountains today and Thursday. Snow level near 5500 feet. Highs 40s. Lows in the upper 20s to low 30s.

Northern Utah and Nevada:
Utah — Increasing clouds north, fair south today. Isolated showers near the mountains late in the day. Mostly cloudy north, partly cloudy south on Thursday with isolated showers near the northern mountains. Continued cool. Lows upper 20s to low 40s tonight. Highs 50s to near 70.

Nevada — Mostly sunny days today and Thursday except partly cloudy northeast on Thursday. High temperatures in the upper 40s to upper 60s. Fair cold nights with lows in the middle teens to upper 30s.

Synopsis:
Fair skies were reported over much of southern Idaho Tuesday, with a few low clouds and snow showers over the higher elevations of the eastern sections of the state. Mullan had snow falling most of the day.

Gusty winds were reported over much of the Magic Valley as well as the eastern areas of the state. Gusts in the Twin Falls and Burley areas were running in the 35 to 40 mph range with slightly lower velocities reported in the east.

Afternoon temperatures were mostly in the low 40s with Emmett recording 61 for the high. McCall and Stanley recorded the low of 18 degrees.

The extended outlook for southern Idaho, Friday through Sunday, indicates scattered snow showers mainly over the mountains will spread eastward across southern Idaho Friday and Saturday. However, by Sunday mostly sunny skies will return to the area. Temperatures will be cool with most highs in the 30s and 40s. Overnight lows will be in the teens and 20s.

Elsewhere in the nation Tuesday, the high of 87 degrees was reported at Palm Springs, Calif. The low was 14 degrees at Gunnison, Colo.

rinded the embassy with troops, cut off its electricity and beamed powerful searchlights at the building.

The United States, contending the Afghans were operating under instructions from the Soviets, lodged a high-level protest with Moscow.

The case involving the Soviet ship-jumper near New Orleans, Miroslav Medvid, left both Moscow and Washington displeased with one another. The Soviets were particularly upset with a Reagan administration statement that it was prepared to use force to get Medvid off the Soviet vessel so that his wishes could be determined.

In the end, Moscow acquiesced to the U.S. request and Medvid insisted he wanted to return to his homeland. But American officials suspect his change of heart was the product of Soviet coercion.

All three episodes have tended to neutralize, at least in part, the positive developments that have occurred over the past two weeks.

It has been a period highlighted by a new U.S. arms control offer, a softening of the anti-Soviet rhetoric by Reagan and his top aides and the first interview given by an American president to Soviet journalists in 24 years. And, even as the two countries prepare for their first summit in six years, they are trying to lay the groundwork for a second summit.

What's more, the Soviets have agreed to give Yelena Bonner, wife of Nobel Prize laureate Andrei Sakharov, her long-sought visa to travel to the West for medical treatment. Her case has been a high priority human rights issue for the administration.

The incidents involving Yurchenko, Sukhanov and Medvid won't spoil the summit but they have, at a minimum, distracted the attention of the two superpowers and perhaps eroded the little confidence that already exists between them.

Nonetheless, presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said Tuesday the events have not changed the U.S. attitude toward the summit.

"For our part, we are proceeding to the summit with a seriousness of purpose that we have always had in an effort to resolve differences between the United States and the Soviet Union," he said.

court would presume to tell them what they intended to do."

The three-judge panel that reviewed his conviction, however, determined that Congress in enacting the ethics law did not specifically preclude criminal prosecution under an earlier statute that makes it a felony to falsify information to a federal agency.

The appellate panel also held that the disclosure forms required of Hansen while he was in Congress specifically contained a warning that any falsification would be subject to civil and criminal sanctions.

As for a possible bid next year to regain the seat he lost by only 170 votes to Democratic Richard Stallings last fall, Hansen said he is still looking at early to mid December for making a decision, but added, "We just have to take one week at a time. You never know what surprises might come up."

Several weeks ago, the full House rejected Hansen's challenge to Stallings' narrow victory that had been based on claims of voting irregularities. Nearly all House Republicans abstained on the vote in a protest over an earlier decision by the Democrat-controlled House to oust a apparent Republican victor in Indiana and seat the Democratic incumbent.

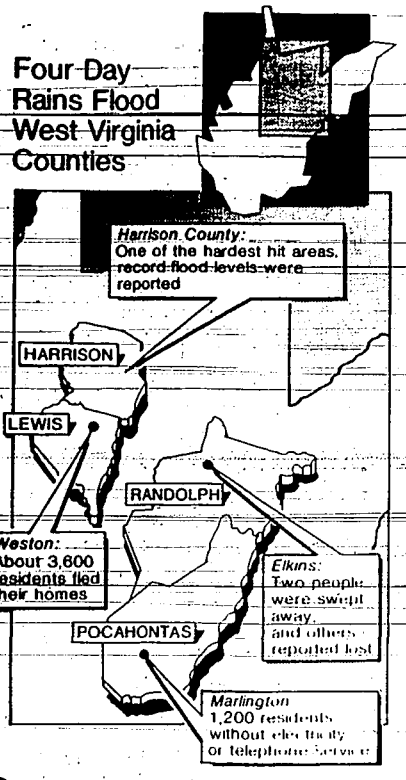
Four-Day Rains Flood West Virginia Counties



Hundreds flee blasts, blaze at refinery

MONT BELVIEU, Texas (AP) — A series of explosions and fires rocked an underground storage tank at a refinery Tuesday, killing two workers, shooting jets of flames high into the air and forcing hundreds to flee their homes.

"We ran as fast as we could," said Dean Conley, an electrician working at the Warren Petroleum Co. refinery and natural gas storage plant. "We didn't stop to turn in our badges."

It took about 200 firefighters nearly six hours to control the blaze, which was fed by three pipelines that could not be shut off because the intense heat kept crews away from valves, said Cul Ingram, a spokesman for Chevron Inc., which owns the complex.

One of the pipelines ruptured while construction crews were doing maintenance work, Ingram said. "I don't know how."

Mayor Fred Miller, who called for the evacuation of the entire town of 1,200, lifted the order about 5 p.m. for about half the residents. He said residents living near the plant would not be allowed to go home yet.

Ingram predicted damage to the complex would be "into the millions" and that the charred area, about 10 percent of the plant, would be closed for a few weeks. The fire was fueled by liquified, highly flammable propane gas, he said.

The blasts occurred in a hollowed out salt dome used to store natural gas, including propane, underground at the company in Mont Belvieu. Smoke could be seen from Houston, about 30 miles away.

One worker, who asked not to be identified, said crews had been working on a gas leak for about 10 minutes when an alarm sounded.

"I just walked out the door," the worker said. "Everybody knew what was happening. I think there was enough time for just about everybody to get out."

"I saw gas rising four feet off the ground," said Henry Ford, 40, a welder. "It was dangerous but pretty. I turned my back and started running."

At least three similar explosions have occurred in the area in the past five years.

"This is becoming an annual event," complained Bill Wallace, who owns a mobile home park in the community.

"There was a loud boom, then a big ball of fire. I've lived here most of my life and this is the worst one I've ever seen," Wallace said.

Shari Falk, 27, who lives about a mile from the refinery, said she fled her home after the third explosion Tuesday.

"It shook my bed. I jumped up and left," she said.

The two dead men, whose names were withheld until pending notification of relatives, were from a construction crew that had worked on the pipeline, Ingram said. The 56 employees of Warren Petroleum were not hurt and all were accounted for, he said.

A fire was reported at the refinery about 9:30 a.m. MST, followed by the first explosion about 15 minutes later, Police Chief Fred Dodd said. The second blast came about 9:55 a.m., followed by another five minutes later.

Warren Petroleum has operated for about 28 years and also is the largest natural gas storage facility in the area.

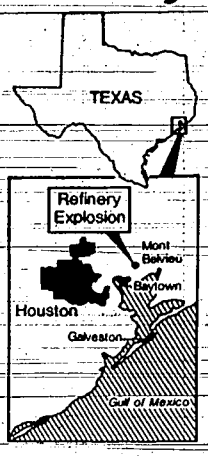
In 1980, officials discovered the presence of lethal hydrocarbon gases after a Mont Belvieu resident turned on her dishwasher and it ignited.

Officials found that more than 820 million cubic feet of ethane-propane had leaked from a well. At one point, more than 70 families were evacuated from their homes, some as long as six months.

The mayor said city officials have tried since 1980 to get the industry to buy out the landowners.

He said the City Council will meet soon with Texas Gov. Mark White to discuss buyout options.

"People have suffered a lot and now they should be fair to these people," Miller said. "We're prepared to act but we're waiting for them."



Still no verdict in spy trial

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The jury in the Richard W. Miller spy trial ended a 13th day of deliberations Tuesday without reaching a verdict in the case of the only FBI agent ever charged with espionage.

The panelists, who were to return to their talks Wednesday morning, recessed early in the afternoon because a juror had to keep a doctor's appointment.

They had spent the day behind closed doors, talking through their lunch hour in an effort to avoid a deadlock.

By day's end, they had logged a total of 67 hours of deliberations over 13 days.

The six women and six men, who reported last week they were divided in their opinions and approaching a deadlock, have sent no word on their progress since then.

It was not known how many jurors were favoring conviction and how many favored acquittal of Miller, the only FBI agent ever charged with espionage.

Raging rivers flood Mid-Atlantic states

The Associated Press

Rivers roared out of their banks Tuesday in West Virginia's worst flooding disaster ever and 13 people were killed in Maryland and the Virginias as a storm deluged the mid-Atlantic states, forcing thousands to evacuate their homes and leaving others missing.

Some residents scrambled to safety on rooftops and in trees as floodwaters also inundated houses in North Carolina and Pennsylvania before the storm system, which had stalled over the Carolinas, crept slowly northward to sea.

Hundreds of roads were submerged, some covered by up to 12 feet of water and others by mudslides, homes were washed away and looting was reported in isolated pockets beyond the reach of busy police.

Forecasters warned that rivers had yet to peak in many areas.

Six one-ton canisters of poisonous chlorine gas were washed into the James River from a plant near Lynchburg, Va., but city Fire Chief William A. Anderson said he was more concerned about several tanks of propane gas seen floating in the river.

"With the rate of the river, they would be like torpedos" if they hit bridge pilings, he said.

Up to 60 barges ripped loose from moorings on the Monongahela River, which starts in West Virginia and flows past Pittsburgh to the Ohio River. Evening rush-hour traffic in Pittsburgh was tied up as police closed bridges while some of the barges swept past.

The National Weather Service predicted the Monongahela would crest at 40 feet, 16 above flood stage, at Point Marion, Pa., where police rescue worker Danny Rhodes said: "The old people in town say this is the highest they've ever seen it."

West Virginia Gov. Arch Moore, who mobilized the National Guard and appealed to President Reagan to designate 22 counties as disaster areas, said the flooding "covered more territory and affected more people" than any in the state's history.

"It's certainly, in terms of the widespread nature, got to rank as the worst flooding disaster West Virginia has ever had," added his press secretary, John Price. Flood warnings were in effect in 33 of the state's 55 counties.

Virginia Gov. Charles S. Robb declared a state of emergency in western and central parts of his state.

"People in the hundreds had to be evacuated by helicopter and with heavy-duty vehicles," said Michael Cline, deputy operations director at the Virginia Department of Emergency Services.

The Pennsylvania National Guard was placed on standby pending local requests for additional manpower, said John Comey of the state Emergency Manpower Agency. The state estimated about 1,200 residents of five southwestern counties were forced from their homes by high water, he said. Flooding forced officials in Washington and Fayette counties to postpone general election voting in 15 precincts, delaying the outcome of at least one political race.

The torrents had persisted for four days. Eight inches of rain fell on Canaan Valley, W.Va., in a 24-hour period ending Tuesday morning, while Cape Hatteras, N.C., received more than 6 inches and Erie, Pa., had 3½ inches in the same period. The weather service said more than 10 inches fell along the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia.

The storm "deepened as it moved into the Carolinas and was able to pull a great deal of moisture . . . off the Atlantic" with 100-knot upper-atmosphere winds, said forecaster Richard Anthony of the National Severe Storms Forecast Center in Kansas City, Mo.

While showers lingered around Washington, D.C., Tuesday afternoon and the storm's heavy runoff remained a threat, Anthony added, "There's not anything (rain) right on its heels."

Gales buffeted islands along the northern New England coast, he said.

Eleven people were killed by the storm in Virginia, most of them around Roanoke. One victim was a motorist whose car struck a floodswept tree, another a Newport News fisherman.

One person died of a heart attack in West Virginia when he was swept out of his truck and had to hang onto a utility pole, Hardy County officials said.

A fisherman swept away by a swollen creek was missing in northwestern Pennsylvania, state police said.

In Roanoke, 250 people were plucked by helicopter Monday night from buildings, said emergency services coordinator Warren Trent.

New battles over defense funding loom

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Appropriations Committee on Tuesday approved a bill appropriating almost $300 billion for the Pentagon and setting the stage for new fights over spending for "Star Wars" research and chemical weapons.

The bill gives the Defense Department $299.6 billion, enough money for the current fiscal year to cover the expected inflation rate, but far less than the $320 billion originally requested by President Reagan.

"This is probably the last year we'll see any support for the president's modernization program for a while, given the budgetary constraints and deficit fears around here," said Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, chairman of the panel's defense subcommittee.

The Democratic-controlled House last week gave overwhelming approval to a bill appropriating most of a projected $292 billion Pentagon budget, including $2.5 billion for Star Wars research and no money for chemical weapons.

The version passed by the Senate panel Thursday on a voice vote includes $2.9 billion for Star Wars, known formally as the Strategic Defense Initative, and $163 million for the first U.S. chemical weapons production since 1969. Moves to eliminate nerve gas and cut Star Wars are expected to be made when the full Senate votes on the bill.

Stevens said he wants to spend $2.7 billion on Star Wars this year, but asked for $200 million more "strictly as a negotiating tactic." A House-Senate conference committee will work out differences between the House bill and the measure which eventually passes the Republican-controlled Senate.

Parents, teens owe apology to school

Now that the apology petition of a few overheated, juvenile parents has faded, let's state a few direct points about the recent brouhaha at Twin Falls High School over a student morning drinking and dope party.

Principal Frank Charlton was not only within his rights, but was exercising a mandated duty and perhaps a legal responsibility, in keeping likely drunk and strung-out students out of an assembly in which harm might well have come to others.

The apology owed here ought to come from the following three groups:

One should come from the parents who threw temper tantrums because their kids were denied their precious assembly. You say life is unfair? Tough toenails.

The second apology should come from the parents of the teens who attended the party. Did the parents back the administration or did some of them try to apply a bit of side pressure to get their children back into classes almost before the "expulsions" were made? Ask around.

The third should come from the party-goers themselves, who, we notice, have slithered away quietly in the ensuing uproar to brag among themselves about how they "beat the rap." They lied to their parents about where they were going at 7 a.m. (It wasn't "cheer" practice), they cost their fellow students a pep assembly, and they could well have endangered innocent lives.

No, the school administration shouldn't apologize here. If anything, in our view, the administration should have gone further and heaved a few of the offending students out of school, then told their parents to jump in Dierkes Lake when the inevitable pressure was applied.

Apologize? For doing the right thing? No way.

R.G. Chrisman

Wednesday's T-N editorial is worth further analysis. Apparently a significant number of Twin Falls citizens have retained a sophomore perception of the world around them, well into their parenting years, as demonstrated by their indignation at the cancelation of a high school pep rally.

Harry Massoth of Buhl has recently offered two thought-provoking letters to The Times-News, both beautifully expressed, regarding the eventual necessity of establishing a system of planetary authority.

Is it possible that Massoth felt obliged to make his point from the perspective of a fictional "Yoda, the great Jedi master" in order to reach an audience of perpetual teenagers?

Massoth correctly interprets the public posturing of world leaders as "immature" — so we should not be amazed to observe a similar immaturity in ordinary local citizens, who would be well advised to accord less priority to little Susie's junior prom and more to probability that she will live long enough to be referred to as "grandma Susie."

In his book and in the currently ongoing excellent PBS series "War", Gwynn Dyer points out that if an event can be assigned a mathematical probability, regardless of how small, then eventually that event will occur.

What mathematical probability can be assigned to the possibility of a nuclear holocaust? Estimates by experts vary from the sublimely optimistic to the doomsday prophecies of the Armageddon theorists.

Let's be charitable on the side of optimism and assume that the figure should be established of .01, 99 to 1 against. Let's also establish a time frame for our estimate, say one year. What we are really saying is that the chances of avoiding nuclear catastrophe for another century are only about one in three. Not very good odds, considering the stakes.

If a couple of obscure cardiologists (one Russian, one American) can put together an organization of 135,000 physicians world wide, dedicated to preserving the human race, and whose efforts can win a Nobel peace prize, then certainly a similar effort by upper echelon principals in world power structures, backed by the full weight of official government sanction, can be even more spectacularly successful.

However, it may be that before such an effort can be initiated, vast numbers of ordinary citizens must adjust their priorities away from preoccupation with high school pep assemblies to more legitimate concerns of a space age civilization.

Harry Massoth is right. The T-N editorial is right. Circulating petitions is right. A concerned effort to criticize a considered judgment by competent school administrators may not be, in honesty, "wrong." But it does indicate rather juvenile perception of the current environment.

Employee drug tests violate individual's right to privacy

Charles Levendosky

The voice asks, "I'd like to speak to an editor or reporter." There's a controlled fury in the voice. A quiet anger. Whatever he wants to say, it must be important to his life, or to his sense of justice.

Satisfied that he is speaking to the right person, he says he wants to read a letter to the editor to me over the phone. I'll listen, but tell him that we need to have a signed copy of the letter before we can publish it. Instead of reading the letter, he tells me why he's angry.

I'm talking to a man who claims he has a position of responsibility with a construction company in Wyoming. According to the voice on the phone, the construction company for which he works has just begun requiring its employees to submit to urinalysis tests for drugs.

Workers who are found to have drugs in their system are terminated. Those who will not submit to the test are canned on the spot. No urine, no job. The anger in his voice is no longer subdued; it is seething. The way he sees it, his rights and dignity as an American are being violated.

The issue is not whether a company has the right to terminate an employee who arrives at the work place under the influence of drugs. They do. Nor is the issue the legal status of street drugs; we have a judicial system to deal with that. The real issue is whether a company has the right to fire an employee who smokes pot or otherwise indulges in recreational drugs after the work day or work week is over.

Does a company have the right to peek into your home through the threat of job loss and tell you what is right? Does a company have the right to violate the checks and balances of the judicial system?

According to a laboratory in Denver, a typical urinalysis will reveal drugs that have been in the system from 72 hours to 10 days. Those three to 10 days raise a serious problem.

The hallucinogenic effects of a drug will probably have worn off, but evidence of the drug will remain for a much longer period of time in a person's fatty tissue, where it is eventually sloughed off into the urine. The test doesn't tell when the drug was ingested, only that there is evidence that the drug was present.

No, the issue isn't the ingestion of illegal drugs, the issue is privacy; the issue is civil rights; the issue is reasonable suspicion. The issue is the violation of the intent of the Fourth Amendment of the Bill of Rights, which seeks to protect people from unreasonable searches by federal or state governments. The catch, of course, is that a private corporation isn't a federal or state government.

I sympathize with companies that have a drug problem with their employees and I recognize that something must be done, but what is done and how it is done are manifestly important in a country based upon democratic principles.

From the companies' point of view, they are merely trying to cut down on worker inefficiency and on-the-job injuries. They seem to be blaming drugs for worker inefficiency. There's a curious leap in logic here. If a worker isn't performing up to par, why not fire the worker for that reason. Isn't lack of performance on a job sufficient reason to fire someone? Why the drug frisk? Why the invasion of the person? Whether a drug or laziness is the reason for a worker's inefficiency is not important — job performance is. Fire the clods, leave urine tests for medical check ups.

A man's dignity is at stake here. A man's sense of a vigilation of fair play is at stake here. While it may be legal, at present, to force employees to take a urine drug test, the ramifications are potentially dangerous to our way of life.

Companies that routinely and randomly require urine drug tests have moved onto law enforcement, without the tradition of checks and balances that has developed over hundreds of years.

In the judicial system, an accused person may be asked to take a lie detector test. If the accused refuses, he is not automatically considered guilty and jailed. Before a highway patrolman can pull a suspect off the highway and request a chemical test for alcohol, there must be probable cause and an arrest. The suspect can still refuse to take a chemical test and not be considered guilty of driving under the influence of alcohol. Those who are arrested for DUI and refuse chemical tests appear at a hearing where the highway patrol officer's probable cause is put under scrutiny. In the corporate world, if you don't take the urine drug test, you are in effect guilty and fired. There are no checks on the corporate power structure, no restraints on in-house policing. And that is the terrible danger. "Policing" without judicial checks and balances is the work of vigilantes.

How should a man feel when not only his dignity is abused, but his home life opened to question? Any man may be forced to swallow his pride in order to feed his family, but is that what corporate America wants — fearful wage slaves?

If companies will not stop this practice on their own, then state governments must step in and protect workers from their employers. Or we can forget about the meaning of our Fourth Amendment. We can forget about another slice of democracy.

Letters/ Parents fail on teaching responsible choices

Schools should teach facts

I wish to applaud Mr. Harlon Baker and the Lions Club for the letter Oct. 31 offering educational programs on alcohol abuse.

Out of general interest, I have been taking some graduate courses in education. I have noticed that teachers in the classes seem to feel that theirs is the whole burden of preventing substance abuse in their students. A junior high school science teacher the other night said, "I wish I could just teach science."

Schools should teach the facts about alcohol, tobacco and drugs. But if we wish our schools to keep up with the rest of the world, teachers should be free to teach science, math, languages and literature.

Where parents have failed to teach responsible choices to their children. The churches, community organizations and law enforcement should help to take up the extra burden, not just our schools.

Fear will work best on drugs

It all began when our oldest son, age 14, was giving verbal instructions to our family on drug abuse. How incredible it was, I thought. Here I am 45 years old and I never knew how to sniff glue or relate to other drugs.

It's a new program in school sponsored by the U.S. government, teaching the youth of America about drugs, teaching types of drugs, how to administer their use, the limits and danger points of each drug; teaching our children their own destruction.

The teaching of drugs in our schools, or anywhere else, has been a mistake, and it is still a mistake. All I hear is "Times have changed." What a poor excuse to give our youth a self-destructive weapon. The drug-related program is sponsored to teach children something they should not do.

I am confused. We teach our youth all they need to know about drugs, to be reliable and safe users, know their own limits, protection from the laws, etc. Then we say "Don't do it." Now I am really confused.

Children are vulnerable — take the fear out of a child and he or she will try anything. Children are also forgetful. Punishment to a child is only a word, that has a true meaning only when it is being enforced.

A few months ago in talking to my two youngest sons, I suggested that when their school began teaching drugs, I would be very proud if they would walk out of the room at the beginning of the drug lesson. If they were stopped, as I am sure they would be, I suggested they tell their teacher, "Don't teach me somthing today that you will punish me for tomorrow."

I cannot change the times and go back to my own youth when "drugs" was a forbidden word. I feel that the best drug protection toward my own children is fear — and fear is caused by a lack of knowledge.

Schools do not teach where and how to buy drugs. This task is easily accomplished by any dealer or pusher knowing that his product, drugs, has the best advertising agency in the world, the U.S. government.

If one child is on drugs because of our drug related program, then we have done a great injustice to that child. I hate to think of the hundreds of thousands of school age children whom have been affected by the decision of legislature to educate them beyond their own reasoning capacity. Schools have firm drug policies, concerning disciplinary action and counseling.

I just cannot understand why we punish them for something we taught them to do.

Those responsible for bringing drugs into this country are killing our youth as directly as if they, themselves, were pulling the trigger of a gun.

Untie the hands of the police, and tie the hands of the criminal courts so that plea bargaining, low bond, probation, suspended sentences, etc. will not be a common occurrence of the habitual drug pusher.

Let my children go to school with an open mind and let them be children.

Evans' dinner criticized

Lloyd Walker of Twin Falls, chairman of something he calls the Democratic Fairness Committee, has criticized Sen. Steve Symms' fundraising activities.

In a letter Sept. 27, Walker denounced a Symms fundraiser in Washington. Because tickets for the political action committees that attended cost $10,000, Walker condemned this affair "for the super rich of America." He asked sarcastically, "Did even one person from Idaho make the social list of the Potomac season? Certainly no Idaho farmer was invited."

If there is a fragment of fairness in Walker's Fairness Committee, he will, to be consistent, now also assail the exclusive Nov. 4 "cocktail buffet in honor of Governor John V. Evans, Democratic candidate for the United States Senate" (as the invitation reads) at the Georgetown mansion of billionaire Union Pacific Railroad tycoon, W. Averell Harriman.

In his special invitation to attend this epicurean evening for Evans, Mr. Harriman encourages his guests to contribute the maximum $2,000 and PAC's the full $10,000 allowed by federal election laws to the "Governor John V. Evans for Senate Committee."

To paraphrase Walker's criticism of Symms, how many Idahoans will mingle and chatter with the beautiful people of Mr. and Mrs. Harriman's Georgetown set?

How many Idaho farmers have been invited to join Mr. Harriman's super-rich Eastern liberal friends as they sip champagne, dine on haute cuisine, and toast the election of John Evans to the Senate?

U.S. officials clear double defector's return trip to Moscow

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vitaly Yurchenko, the Soviet spymaster who slipped from the CIA's grasp after three months in America, was cleared to return to Russia Tuesday after assuring U.S. authorities he wasn't being forced by the Soviet Union to go home.

Yurchenko, clenching his hands over his head like a victorious boxer, left the State Department after a half-hour meeting and declared, "Yes, home!" when asked if he was heading back to the Soviet Union.

State Department spokesman Charles Redman said it appeared that Yurchenko's action "was a personal decision."

With four Soviet diplomats on one side and six State Department officials, including a doctor, on the other, Yurchenko had his first face-to-face meeting with U.S. authorities since he walked away from their custody over the weekend, after three months in the United States.

Yurchenko had appeared at an extraordinary news conference at the Soviet Embassy Monday, charging he had been abducted in Rome, drugged and pumped for secrets in CIA hideaways. The State Department denied the charges, saying Yurchenko had voluntarily defected.

As a result of his meeting on Tuesday, "the United States government has decided that Mr. Yurchenko's decision to return to the Soviet Union was made of his own free will, and that he is now free to leave the United States," Redman said.

"In arranging this meeting we wanted to satisfy ourselves that Mr. Yurchenko truly did wish to return to the USSR and that he made this decison freely and of his own volition," Redman said.

He said the meeting was held in an atmosphere free of the possibility of Soviet coercion and that Yurchenko was told he would not be subject to U.S. detention or returned to Soviet custody either if he din't want to be.

There was no immediate word on when Yurchenko would leave the country, but CBS News reported Tuesday night that a Soviet aircraft would arrive at Dulles International Airport outside Washington Wednesday to take Yurchenko back to the Soviet Union.

Meanwhile, the top two members of the Senate Intelligence Committee said the panel will investigate the CIA's handling of the Yurchenko case.

Yurchenko, identified by U.S. intelligence experts as the onetime head of the KGB's American section, came to the United States in early August and was in the custody of CIA officials until last weekend.

Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., Senate Intelligence Committee vice chairman, said Yurchenko escaped after having dinner in Georgetown, a fashionable section of Washington, on Saturday night.

Love affair may have been behind initial switch to the West

WASHINGTON (AP) — KGB official Vitaly Yurchenko may have defected to the West in part to be near a girlfriend in Canada and may have returned because the affair turned sour, U.S. intelligence sources said Tuesday.

The sources, who declined to be identified by name, said that Yurchenko, who has a wife and a 16-year-old son in the Soviet Union, may have decided to defect at the U.S. Embassy in Rome on Aug. 1 in order to be near his alleged lover. She was described by the sources as the wife of a Soviet diplomat posted to Canada.

Yurchenko told reporters on Monday that he never defected, but was drugged and kidnapped to the United States against his will and escaped to the Soviet Embassy here at his first opportunity, last Saturday.

One U.S. intelligence source, attempting to explain possible reasons for Yurchenko's surprise return to the Soviets, said of the woman in Canada: "She liked him as a spy but not as a defector." This source said that when Yurchenko realized the affair was over, that contributed to his decision to go back.

The sources described as inaccurate a published report which said Yurchenko had a girlfriend in the United States and another in the Soviet Union, and decided to go back when plans to secretly spirit his Soviet girlfriend to the West fell through.

It could not be determined from the sources whether Yurchenko had met the woman while he worked in Moscow for the KGB as chief of its operations in the United States and Canada, or if he met her in the Western Hemisphere.

Meanwhile, on Capitol Hill, several members of the Senate Intelligence Committees voiced doubts about the CIA's assertion that Yurchenko had been a true defector who simply changed his mind.

"My own pessimistic view is that we have an agent that was foisted on us," said Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., committee vice chairman.

Leahy suggested that the KGB had concocted the scheme as a reaction to several recent setbacks. "How better to regain some lost ground than to pull a fast one on the CIA?" asked Leahy.

Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., a committee member, said, "I'm leaning toward the theory that this was a KGB set-up to embarrass the United States before the summit."

Nunn said he doubted that if Yurchenko had truly defected, the longtime KGB officer would think he could fool the KGB with the kidnapping tale he outlined Monday.

Sen. William Cohen, R-Maine, another committee member, also expressed doubt that Yurchenko simply changed his mind about defecting to the West. Cohen said he suspected all along that Yurchenko had been a double agent.

However, Rep. Bob Livingston, R-La., a House Intelligence Committee member, said he agreed with the CIA assessment that Yurchenko had been a genuine defector who had second thoughts.

"Yurchenko came over as a legitimate defector," Livingston said. "We bled him for a lot of information and then he went home. We just lost a good agent."

Censorship disappoints White House

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House said Tuesday that President Reagan's interview with four Moscow journalists was "a positive achievement," but it also voiced disappointment "that the Soviets felt compelled to censor certain portions of the interview."

The government newspaper Izvestia devoted a full page to the first interview of an American president by Soviet journalists in 24 years. However, it omitted some key points, such as Reagan's statements that Moscow installed the government in Afghanistan and that Warsaw Pact troops outnumbered NATO forces in Europe.

"We do regret and are disappointed that the Soviets felt compelled to censor certain portions of the interview," said presidential spokesman Larry Speakes.

"But we feel that (the) substantial part of the interview that was published will nevertheless give the Soviets a better understanding of the American attitudes and policies as we approach the meeting in Geneva," he added.

Speakes said there had not been any advance agreement with the Soviets requiring them to publish the entire text of the interview, which he called "a positive achievement."

In addition to the full page on Reagan's comments, Izvestia gave equal space on the facing page to counter the president's arguments with the Kremlin's position and to interpret his statements.

Nicaraguan arms listed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Over the past six months, the Nicaraguan military has tripled its inventory of howitzer cannon and also received a dozen new aircraft from the Soviet Union, the Pentagon said Tuesday.

Soviet arms shipments since last April have increased from about 50 to about 145 the number of howitzers available to the Nicaraguan army, and increased the number of aircraft from 65 to 77.

Of the 77 aircraft, 45 are airplanes of fairly old vintage and 32 are helicopters, including six of the Soviet Union's most sophisticated Hind-D attack copters, the Pentagon said.

Besides the increase in howitzers and aircraft, the new inventory shows no major changes. The Nicaraguans are still said to possess about 150 tanks; 200 other armored vehicles; 200 anti-aircraft guns; 300 missile launchers and more than 700 surface-to-air missiles; 100 anti-tank guns, and about 24 BM-21 multiple rocket launchers.

"But there appears to be an increase in arms shipments to the Nicaraguan government now under way," said Pentagon spokesman Bob Sims. "Of course, it's going to take us time to determine whether this is part of a sustained overall increase in the level of the Soviet arms supplies to Nicaragua.

Yesterday's Puzzle Solved:

L.M. Boyd — What's what

Q: What's the traditial Japanese breakfast?

A: An exceedingly sour pickled plum. Fermented bean curd soup. Hot rice. Seaweed. Dried fish. That's all changed up now, though. McDonald's is there. So are packaged cereals.

Q: Didn't the Viking sailors of old sleep in hammocks on their boats?

A: No, sir, each was assigned two sealskin sleeping bags — one for his gear and one for himself.

A deer uncumbered by offspring typically moves from one bedding-down spot to another four times a night. A raccoon similarly at liberty typically stays all night but only that night in any one den tree.

ROYAL TWINS

Q: What happens if a queen gives birth to twin sons? How can it be known which is to inherit the throne?

A: Such royal births are always attended by official witnesses to identify the first born.

Only one wife in five tells pollsters she likes her husband just the way he is. The others would like changes. Madam, how would you remodel your matrimonial mate, if such were possible? Almost invariably buried in the answers researchers usually get on this one are the words "make more money."

ZOO FOOD

The great zoos of Europe have great restaurants thereby. Or many do. Not so here. Pity. Two out of three people who go to zoos are grownups. If they could follow the European pattern, they'd make an even more special occasion out of it. With a light meal in wildlife decor. It'd be promotable, too. Take a baboon to lunch.

Numerous writers take a small historical fact and dream up a whole novel around it. You want to try? All right, it's actually against the law in Yukon, Okla., to pull your dentist's tooth. Concoct your story around that fact?

If you haven't caught that mouse around your house in the last two years, better give up. It has the age equivalent of an 80-year-old human, and no doubt deserves a quiet retirement.

That sort of human most likely to get a headache, according to the categorizers, is the young well-educated woman.

Englebert Humperdinck was born in India.

Daily Horoscope

GENERAL TENDENCIES: A day and evening to think in terms of your romantic longings and how they can best be expressed over a period of time so that true harmony exists between you and the one you love.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Patch up an argument with your attachment and have a delightful time together. Perfect some fine talent you have.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): You can improve the situation at home if you don't harp on an old subject. Control your temper.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Don't permit some work problem to upset you, and then you can handle correspondence and travel matters well.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Plan early how to solve monetary problems and then work constructively on them. Forget pleasure today.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Go after your personal wishes and gain them and you can settle home affairs this week. Seeing good pals at their home is wise today.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): Plan your romantic life as you want it to be with the approval of your mate and later don't be sarcastic with anyone else.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Be with a fine pal who understands you and forget some monetary adviser who is off the beam today.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Early study how to make your worldly status even more enviable and forget that frustration that is bothering you.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Don't hang on to some worry that could keep you from getting into profitable activities.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): Study the promises you have made to others and keep those that are most important and forget going after some peronal goal.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): A good-hearted man can be of assistance to you if you show you are willing to follow suggestions given you.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): Your work can go along very nicely if you adhere to policy level and do not argue with co-workers.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY...he or she will have much ability in executive positions and can head large companies where policy matters have to be decided upon and directions given wisely, however, if bogged down with details, will not do so well. One who will need to be encouraged in order to do the best work.

Ex-Beatle fears article on Lennon could be misinterpreted

JOHN LENNON
He was 'no angel'

LONDON (AP) — Former Beatle Paul McCartney said Tuesday that John Lennon was "no angel" but that he loved him dearly despite being quoted as calling him a "maneuvering swine" who took credit for songs he did not write.

In a statement issued in London, McCartney said he feared an article in Britain's Woman Magazine based on a telephone interview with author Hunter Davies four years ago could be misinterpreted.

In the interview published today, McCartney was quoted as describing his songwriting partner as jealous, insecure with women, and suspicious of McCartney's motives.

"He could be a maneuvering swine," McCartney was quoted as saying of Lennon, who was slain in front of his New York City apartment on Dec. 7, 1980. "Since his death, he's become Martin Luther Lennon. He wasn't some sort of a holy saint. But I, like millions of others, loved him dearly."

McCartney was quoted as saying he and Lennon "had great screaming sessions about my songs" while they were Beatles from 1960 to 1970, when they composed some of the world's most popular tunes.

But McCartney, 43, was quoted as saying he and fellow Beatle George Harrison idolized Lennon in their early days together.

"As I matured ... I got up to his level," he was quoted as saying. "I wrote songs and sometimes they were as good as his. It made him insecure."

McCartney also allegedly charged that Lennon took credit for songs he did not write.

"I saw somewhere that he says he helped on Eleanor Rigby. Yeah, about half a line," McCartney was quoted as saying. "He also forgot completely that I wrote the tune for 'In My Life.' But perhaps he just made a mistake."

Ferraro will ignore D'Amato fund letter

NEW YORK (AP) — There's at least one New Yorker who won't answer a letter seeking contributions to U.S. Sen. Alfonse D'Amato's re-election campaign — potential challenger Geraldine Ferraro.

A mass mailing from D'Amato arrived at Ms. Ferraro's Queens home on Monday, asking her to contribute "whatever you can afford" to the senator's campaign.

"Dear Ms. Ferraro, I want to thank you in advance for giving me your support," the letter began. "I must have the funds to purchase media time to counter the ultraliberal imminent attacks against me. That is why it is so important that I can count on you..."

But Ms. Ferraro, who rose to national prominence as a vice presidential candidate last year and has been mentioned as a Democratic challenger to D'Amato, won't be kicking in to the freshman senator's campaign chest, one of her aides said.

"I don't think she'll have the time," the aide said. "Or the inclination."

Prince has promise at Australian track

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — Prince Charles showed promising punter instincts Tuesday when he narrowly lost a bet to a seven-year-old gelding named "What A Nuisance" at the Melbourne Cup, Australia's biggest annual sporting event.

A brewery company's sponsorship made it the first $1 million ($700,000 U.S. dollars) horse race in the South Pacific.

The prince of Wales' undisclosed wager was on Kolro Corrie May carrying odds of 10 to 1. What A Nuisance, running at 15 to 1 odds, won by a short neck in the field of 23 horses.

The heir to the British throne revealed his foray into gambling during a presentation of the cup trophy.

"The horse that won beat the horse I had money on by a head," said the prince, who also officially opened a new grandstand named in his honor.

Charles and Princess Diana are visiting Australia for the 150th birthday celebrations of Victoria State and their attendance at the Melbourne Cup was the highlight of their two-week tour, which ends Nov. 8.

Hustling Herdsmen, Beaverettes changing, but it takes time

Iowa 4-H clubs asked to drop sexist names

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Federal officials are trying to get the Hustling Herdsmen and dozens of other 4-H clubs to adopt new names if the old ones carry sexist overtones, but change is not coming easily.

"Little boys don't want to be Dainty Dollies, and little girls don't want to be Banty Roosters," said Randy Johnson, Clay County 4-H adviser.

Some groups are resisting the change, saying there is no discrimination as long as a separate club exists for the other sex.

"I think it's ridiculous," said Vicki Kerns of Plover, who has been the adult leader of the Powhaten Squaws for four years and was once a member herself.

"As long as they have a boys' club, they're not going to want to join ours anyway. You can read discrimination into just about anything, but we're not going to change until we have to," she said.

Mrs. Kerns said the name of her group, the Squaws, has not prevented girls from doing things that might be considered boys' activities. "We've got lots of girls that exhibit sheep and other livestock," she said.

The campaign for name changes has been going on for about two years, but there has been little publicity, said Roy Hougen of Fort Dodge, assistant state 4-H leader. "We've been playing it low key," he said.

The groups support themselves, but some advisers and books are provided by the county extension system, which receives federal funding.

Of the 2,500 4-H clubs in the state, about 10 percent have names that indicate that only one sex is welcome, said Hougen.

Traditionally, Iowa has had boys and girls 4-H clubs, as opposed to other states, where there are coed clubs," he said.

"We're in the process of encouraging coed clubs, (Federal law) declares that you can't discriminate on the basis of sex.

Federal officials want the list of sexist names down to 3 percent of the total by 1987, said Kate Lee, 4-H leader in Polk County.

Ms. Lee said seven of the 44 groups in Polk County have been asked to change their names: the Altoona Hustling Herdsmen, the Ankenyettes, the Beaverettes, the Bondurant Showmen, the Four Mile Lassies, the Urbandale Cadettes and the Clayettes.

Several already have changed their names to comply. The Ankeny 4-H Boys Club just dropped the word Boys. The Loyal Pepperettes went to Merry Men and Maids, and the Elkhart Rising Sons changed to Elkhart Rising Suns.

Girl who hit teacher granted probation

LONOKE, Ark. (AP) — A 16-year-old girl, sentenced to three years in prison for hitting her math teacher, plans to continue her education outside of school after having her sentence amended to probation, her lawyer said.

"We've gotten what we feel is an appropriate disposition," said W.C. Bentley, attorney for Tina Walker, 16, who was convicted Oct. 9 of second-degree battery, after being placed on three years' probation Monday.

After a hearing in Lonoke Circuit Court, Miss Walker hugged her mother, Inez Walker, and told reporters, "I'm glad it is all over."

The former eighth-grader was charged under a 1981 law that made attacking an on-duty teacher, police officer, firefighter or state employee a felony. She was tried as an adult.

The girl was arrested in May at Carlisle High School, just east of Little Rock, where she attacked Pam Berry, 37, in a classroom.

She arrived in class late that day, refused to close the door and struck Mrs. Berry on the head and back with her fists when the teacher tried to take her to the principal's office, according to testimony.

Miss Walker spent 69 days in jail before her trial. She spent two days in the Women's Unit of the state Correction Department before being freed Oct. 26 on a $10,000 appeal bond.

She has moved in with her mother, who has rented a house in nearby Hazen, and plans to enter a high school general equivalence degree program, Bentley said.

Bentley asked Circuit Judge Jim Burnett to amend his previous order and sentence Miss Walker as a youthful offender. In exchange, he withdrew his motion for a new trial.

Burnett said the girl would have to serve her full prison sentence if she violated any of the conditions of her probation.

"I want you to understand that the jury rendered a verdict of three years in prison and that still stands," Burnett said. "The only difference is that you are being sentenced under the youthful offender's act.

The girl's record would be expunged when her probation period ends, he said.

Prosecutor Will Feland said he did not object to the modified sentence.

"I felt like the jury verdict should not be disturbed and this does not disturb the verdict," he said.

Burnett granted Feland's request that Miss Walker be ordered to stay away from Mrs. Berry and her family.

Feland said he would prosecute similar cases in the same way if the school had exhausted alternatives to prosecution.

Punishment of 4th grader brings suit

JENNINGS, Okla. (AP) — The father of a fourth-grader has filed a $2.5 million lawsuit against school officials, alleging his son was isolated in an open-sided cardboard refrigerator carton during three months of classes.

Mickey Bohannon filed the lawsuit Monday in federal court in Tulsa on behalf of his 9-year-old son William.

The lawsuit alleges that teacher Cathy Woodrell had the box delivered to her classroom at Jennings Elementary School in Pawnee County in late February.

Ms. Woodrell and fellow teacher Banetha Buchanan instructed the boy "to place his desk inside this box, obstructing all view of his surroundings with the exception of one open end which faced a blackboard," the lawsuit alleges.

It contends the boy was told to remain in the box each school day until school was dismissed in May. Bohannon said he was not informed "and at no time consented to the disciplinary action."

The civil rights suit claims the boy was subjected to "emotional and psychological stress, deprived of academic instruction and social skill development."

Bohannon asks damages to pay for counseling for his son, who now is enrolled at another school.

A spokeswoman at the school said school officials had been instructed not to discuss the lawsuit.

PG-13 Rating Introduced

A new rating category is in place as of July 1. This new category is inserted between the current PG and R ratings. It is designated as "PG-13: Parents are strongly cautioned to give special guidance for attendance of children under 13. Some material may be inappropriate for young children."

The revised five-category system of the voluntary film industry rating program is now as follows:

G: General Audiences, all ages admitted.

PG: Parental guidance suggested. Some material may not be suitable for children.

PG-13: Parents are strongly cautioned to give special guidance for children under 13. Some material may be inappropriate for young children.

R: Restricted, under-17 requires accompanying parent or adult guardian.

X: No one under 17 admitted.

All films rated after July 1 will be given ratings under the new five-category system.

Solidarity foe resigns as Polish premier

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, who crushed the Solidarity union with the steel fist of martial law, will resign as premier today to concentrate on his work as Communist Party chief, party and diplomatic sources said.

He will be replaced as premier by Zbigniew Messner, deputy premier and a member of the party's ruling Politburo, the sources reported.

Western diplomats said Jaruzelski, by deciding to step down as head of the government, was signaling the end of the Polish political crisis that led to the declaration of martial law and suppression of the free union movement in December, 1981.

They said the move also was designed to strengthen the party, the real power in this and other communist countries, which lost nearly 1 million members after a summer of labor turmoil in 1980 gave birth to Solidarity. The union now is outlawed and most of its leaders have been driven underground.

WOJCIECH JARUZELSKI
To keep top party post

The government change, which the sources said was approved Tuesday at a Communist Party Central Committee meeting in Warsaw, was expected to be made public Wednesday at the inaugural session of the new parliament.

Messner, 56, has been responsible for coordinating the economic reform program since Jaruzelski made him deputy premier in November, 1985.

Jaruzelski, 62, became premier February, 1981, and Communist Party chief eight months later — two months before the military crackdown.

"Poland is the only communist country in the world where the government was doing the governing rather than the party," one diplomat said. "It means Jaruzelski has decided the problem in Poland is no longer political but economic."

Diplomats said that by relinguishing control over day-to-day government operations, he would be able to devote his attention to party matters prior to next year's Communist Party congress.

Jaruzelski said nothing about his plans in a speech to the Central Committee, which was broadcast on state television Tuesday, but did refer to himself as the "until-now-prime minister."

He said he was "convinced that the new government will consistently continue the government's line that has been conducted up until now.

"As the until-now prime minister, I have had the occasion to present to the members of the Central Committee . . . the various problems the government was dealing with," he said.

Ballot adds 2nd slot

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Ferdinand E. Marcos changed his mind Tuesday and announced that a vice president also will be chosen in the election planned for Jan. 17. He said filling the post would ensure political stability.

The last vice president, Fernando Lopez, lost his job in 1972 when Marcos abolished the office and began eight years of martial-law rule.

Marcos did not say who his running mate would be in the presidential election, but opposition leaders said they doubted it would be his wife Imelda. They predicted that the United States would frown on such a move, which one called "brutally vulgar."

He had said originally that the election would be only for president and that the vice presidency would be filled in a later vote.

Opponents responded that the continued lack of a vice president, and thus a specified successor, would aggravate political instability in the Philippines.

Mrs. Marcos is minister of human settlement and one of the nation's most powerful political figures. She said in an interview Tuesday that she would take an active part in the campaign.

The president's six-year term runs until 1987. The surprise election call came at a time of growing insurgency by communist guerrillas.

Mexican villages surrounded in hunt for slayers

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Soldiers surrounded villages and put up roadblocks in Veracruz state Tuesday as Mexican authorities intensified the hunt for marijuana traffickers who killed 22 members of an anti-drug squad.

Autopsies showed 16 of the victims had internal injuries that indicated they had been beaten or tortured, a Veracruz medical examiner said.

Federal authorities identified the victims as five Federal Judicial Police officers, 12 state and local policemen and five local men on the police payroll as guides and informants.

Three men are in custody and about 60 others have been questioned in the slayings that occurred following a shootout Friday near Hidalgotitlan, a mountain village accessible only by helicopter or river launch.

Enrique Arenal, head of the government's anti-narcotics campaign, said Tuesday that state officials were among those being investigated. He did not identify them, but the chief of Interpol in Mexico, Cmdr. Florentino Ventura, was quoted in newspapers here as saying they included a state police commander.

Several landowners are also being questioned, Arenal said.

About 500 soldiers and 100 policemen are hunting the 70 to 80 drug traffickers who staged the attack, Ventura said.

Four men whose bodies were discovered late Monday near the ambush site were probably drug traffickers killed in the shootout, Ventura said.

Ventura said the three suspects, plus two local men who worked with police but escaped during the attack, were being questioned about whether they directed police to the ambush site.

Mexican authorities estimate more than 10,000 tons of marijuana are grown annually in the country. About 30 percent of the marijuana consumed in the United States comes from Mexico, U.S. authorities say.

Drug bosses virtually control the mountains spanning Veracruz and adjacent Oaxaca state, employing thousands of peasant farmers in marijuana and poppy cultivation, according to Mexican authorities.

Commander says Israeli aides may go

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — The leader of the militia Israel trains and supports in south Lebanon said Tuesday that his men are in control of the border area and Israeli advisers may be able to leave soon.

Antoine Lahd, a retired Lebanese army general, told a news conference his 2,000-man South Lebanon Army has "been able to prove beyond any doubt that it is controlling the area" since Israel pulled the bulk of its troops out of Lebanon on June 10.

An undisclosed number of Israeli troops are stationed in the "security zone," a strip of Lebanese territory about six miles deep that abuts the border.

Lahd said there had been a turnaround in the opinion of government officials and the public in Israel about the ability of his militiamen, most of whom are Christians, as is the general.

"That's why we hope that it will be possible in the near future to contemplate talking with the Israeli side about the possibility of gradually withdrawing the advisers who want to get back to their homes and families," said Lahd, who was dressed in a dark business suit.

The only Israeli military presence at the news conference, in a downtown Tel Aviv office building, was a uniformed reporter for the army radio station.

Lahd would not speculate on when the Israelis might be able to leave, saying only that whether it happened in "one month or six months" depended on the Syrians.

Bonner due for checkup on Nov. 28

ROME (AP) — An Italian eye specialist said Tuesday that the wife of Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov is expected to arrive at his clinic in Siena for an extensive checkup late this month.

Dr. Renato Frezzotti said in an interview broadcast by the state-run radio that Yelena Bonner would probably arrive after Nov. 26. The physician did not believe Mrs. Bonner needed an operation, a spokesman in the doctor's office said.

Mrs. Bonner underwent an operation for glaucoma at the Siena clinic in 1977 and last returned for a checkup in 1979.

A friend of Mrs. Bonner in Florence, Nina Harkevitch, said the dissident's wife would fly from Moscow to Rome about Nov. 24, spend two days in Florence, then go to Siena.

On Monday, Sakharov and his wife spoke by telephone with relatives in Newton, Mass., and said Mrs. Bonner would travel to the United States after her treatment in Siena.

Councilman unseats Burley's mayor

BURLEY — Councilman Ken Fronk soundly defeated three-term incumbent Mayor Chuck Shadduck by taking 50 percent of the votes cast for mayor in Tuesday's city election.

Fronk received 1,006 votes, and Shadduck received 639 votes. Mayoral challenger Joe Peters, a former Burley mayor, received 340 votes.

Winning terms on the City Council are newcomers Wendell McMurray, a retired business man, Clay Handy, manager of Handy Trucking, and LaVern Jackson, co-owner of Jackson Plumbing. Incumbents Roy Land and Frances McDonald were defeated in the 10-way race for the three seats.

Voter registrations were up by 60 percent over the last city election for a total of 2,948 total voters registered this year.

In the council race, McMurray gained 1,052 votes, Handy received 861 votes, Jackson, 835 votes, McDonald, 778 votes, Land, 607 votes, David G. Gibbons, 742 votes, Terry Barnes, 380 votes, Vaughn Egan, 342 votes, Kim Anderson, 211 votes, and Robert Kulhanek, 75 votes.

One of the first matters of council business following the election will be the appointment of someone to fill the remaining two years of Fronk's term. Fronk is expected to make that appointment when he takes office in January.

As the fourth-place winner in the council race, Frances McDonald is the most likely candidate for Fronk's seat. However, Fronk would not commit himself Tuesday to naming McDonald but said he will place McDonald and fifth place finisher Gibbons on his list of prospective candidates.

Fronk said he felt that he won this election easily because in the previous election for mayor, he was the third finisher in a field of four candidates. This time, the second place candidate, Cloyd Taylor, did not run, leaving him the chance to garner those votes that went to Taylor last time, Fronk said.

"Cloyd and I didn't split the vote this time," he said.

Fronk said that he has no plans to make administrative changes. Fronk said that the use of committees has not been utilized as they should have been and that he will make departmental committees with a councilman at the head of each a stronger part of city government.

Jerome mayor re-elected; two incumbents defeated

JEROME — Mayor Ralph Peters was the only incumbent re-elected Tuesday in a Jerome City Council election that spelled defeat for two long-time council members, Walter Bentzinger and Glen Capps.

Peters garnered 560 votes to defeat challenger Homer West, who collected 168 votes.

West and two other Jerome residents, Larry Burton and Susanne Colvin, had campaigned on a platform to bring more reasonable sewer and water rates to Jerome city residents. None of the three was elected.

Gerald Ostler, a Jerome businessman and county coroner, won one of the two council positions with 402 votes and Nathan Brooks, a retired Jerome resident and former city council member, was elected to the other with 365 votes.

Eight candidates ran for the three vacancies, which officials said could have split the vote and hindered the incumbents.

Bentzinger, who was seeking a fourth term on the council, received 248 votes and Capps, city police commissioner who has served two terms, was close behind with 246 votes.

One of the issues in the election involved the joint city-county law enforcement system. Capps had urged separation of the agencies, with the city police moving into a building recently purchased by the city. He said such a move would better serve city residents and add efficiency to law enforcement. Opponents argued city costs would rise because of having to hire separate dispatchers, records personnel and purchase radio equipment.

"I think the police problems probably accounted for the defeat (of Capps and Bentzinger)," Peters said.

"I am sorry to lose them from the council, but now we will see how well we can do with the two new men," he added.

Peters said he was very pleased with his own showing in the election. Brooks and Ostler both said prior to election that they favored continuing the joint law enforcement system in the interest of economy.

However, Ostler also expressed the hope that better police training, especially in the field of crime-scene investigation, could be provided for officers of the city and county agencies.

Wright returned; Wasko ousted

KIMBERLY — Sixty percent of the registered voters in Kimberly went to the polls Tuesday to defeat one incumbent council member and return a second to office.

Councilman Jack Wright, who was serving under appointment, was elected to one of the two council seats and led the balloting with 341 votes. A newcomer, Thomas R. Lewis, received 192 votes, which pushed Council President Ted Wasko, with 158 votes, out of office. Also defeated was Connie Stone who polled 125 votes.

City Clerk Edythe Widmer said there were 420 votes cast out of 692 registered voters.

The major issue in Kimberly revolved around a police department investigation that was ordered by Mayor Ron Jones, a critic of Police Chief Jim Campbell and his department. Wasko has supported the police chief, along with two other council members whose terms did not expire this year. Stone also was a critic of the police department.

Lewis did not disclose his views on the police investigations prior to the election, but instead called for more city effort to obtain grants for sewer and water projects. He is a farm management instructor at the College of Southern Idaho and ran unsuccessfully for the city council two years ago.

Wright, who owns and operates Kimberly Nurseries, said he is interested in the outcome of both police investigations, including the one by the Idaho attorney general's office and Twin Falls police detective Gary Corder.

P&Z members join city council

KETCHUM — Two members of the Ketchum Planning and Zoning Commission will move up a notch in the city government after winning a five-candidate race for two City Council seats Tuesday.

Sue Orb and Larry Young out-polled one incumbent by a sizeable margin and narrowly beat another candidate in the most hotly-contested race in recent years. The main issue centered around the economic growth of the city and cooperation among the members of the council.

Unable to retain his seat on the council was Tim Crawford, a strong supporter of controlled growth, who was challenged by all candidates for his abrasive nature and by some for his strict conservationist positions.

Karl Bick, who ran on a platform of economic stimulation balanced with reasonable growth, narrowly missed by polling only 14 votes less than Orb. Bick had the support of many of the town's business operators and ran an elaborate, expensive campaign.

Orb and Young appeared to many to be the more moderate candidates in the race, with Young having more of an emphasis on development and Orb favoring more controlled growth.

Both ran on a platform that promoted more cooperation on a council that has been bitterly divided in the last year.

"Hopefully, we are going to have a little less personally involved," said Orb after the results were announced. "I would like to think people could cooperate a little more."

Election returns

Richfield

RICHFIELD — A 20-year veteran of Richfield City Council was the top vote-getter in Tuesday's election.

James M. Brown, a supervisor with the Richfield Highway District, received 88 votes in his quest for re-election. Richfield Mayor Charles Buttcane said. Brown will begin serving a new four-year term in January.

Another incumbent, Deloy Wickham, received 69 votes in his bid for a second four-year term. Wickham is a truck driver with Ward's Cheese Co.

Challenger Joe Matheney, who operates a backhoe service, was close behind Wickham with 61 votes.

Buttcane reported a total of 116 people voted in the election. He added that the turn-out was smaller than last year.

With a voter turnout of 668 out of 994 registered voters, McKercher said there were many senior citizens who supported him.

Hailey

HAILEY — By a decisive margin, Pascal Drake was elected mayor of Hailey, upsetting Mayor Wordell Rainey in what was considered a large voter turnout for an off-year election.

Winning 72 percent of the votes cast, Drake received 514 votes against Rainey's 197.

In the council race, incumbent Councilman Joe Maccarillo, 46, was re-elected to a four-year term with 539 votes, and newcomer Rick Davis, 36, won a four-year council seat with 437 votes. Councilman Bill House lost his council seat with 282 votes.

"There's no doubt in my mind the citizens wanted a change," Drake said, referring to his wide margin of victory.

Voter turnout was good, with 65 percent of those registered casting ballots. Voter registration was up 16 percent over the last municipal election, in 1983. City Clerk Connie Ellway recorded 1,106 voters registered, up from 930 two years ago.

Albion

ALBION — With a heavy voter turn-out in city elections Tuesday, newcomer James D. Kelley edged out two opponents in a hotly contested race.

Kelley received 57 votes to beat Councilman Ernest Straubhaar with 44 votes and Reed Shaw with 28 votes.

Voters also elected incumbent Bennie Chatburn to a four-year council seat. Chatburn won the seat in Tuesday's closest election, beating out Nathan D. Warren by only four votes, 54 to 50. Candidate Albert P. "Jake" Smith received 21 votes.

Winning two-year seats on the council are incumbent Mayor John Kay. Powell, who wanted to relinquish his job as mayor but didn't want to stop his involvement in city government, and Sally Beltia. Powell received 83 votes, and Beltia attracted 80 votes. Challenger Barbara Anderson received 66 votes.

The Albion city clerk reported that all but 15 registered voters cast ballots.

Hansen

HANSEN — Larry Bourn, a declared candidate, easily captured one of two open council seats in Hansen's city elections.

But former Mayor Galen Stimpson grabbed the other chair with a write-in campaign, defeating Karen Valleau by four votes.

Bourn received 88 votes in the balloting. Stimpson's write-in support brought him 63 votes, and Valleau had 59 votes. City Clerk Darlene Miller said.

The victory gives Bourn his first term on the Hansen Council. Stimpson is a veteran of city government, having served as Hansen's mayor from 1976 through 1983.

Miller said 123 voters went to the polls on Tuesday, about three-quarters of the city's 165 registered voters.

Two other candidates received significant numbers of write-in votes. They were Art Mitchell, with 16 votes, and Ronald Gates, with nine.

Murtaugh

MURTAUGH — A music teacher who never campaigned was placed on the Murtaugh City Council along with two declared candidates in Tuesday's election.

John Haeberle, who teaches music at Murtaugh High School, won eight votes and a council chair, apparently when a friend decided he might be a good candidate.

"That's as formal as it got," Haeberle said. He said he intends to accept the seat.

Less surprising were the results for two other open seats. Councilman Robin Wright was elected mayor with 20 votes. He has served one term. Current Mayor Allen Cummins decided not to run for re-election, City Clerk Jeannine Bennett said.

Candidate Mary Schlermeier also won a council seat, receiving 22 votes.

Twenty-two of Murtaugh's 28 registered voters cast ballots, Bennett said.

Eden

EDEN — City voters re-elected three incumbents Tuesday to the Eden City Council, according to City Clerk Edith Utt.

Diann McNeil was elected to her second four-year term with 52 votes. Donald Petersen also won a second four-year term with 63 votes.

Melvin Rife won his bid for a council seat with 55 votes. Rife had served on the council in the past, but didn't run in the last election. He returned to the council when he was appointed to fill a vacancy left by Dave Winter, who left the area.

The incumbents were challenged by Jane Anderson who received 25 votes.

Dietrich

DIETRICH — Three new members were elected to the Dietrich City Council in Tuesday's election.

Willard Stevensen will be the new mayor and William Bingham and Robert Jauregui will be new councilmen. The candidates were unopposed in the race.

Incumbent Mayor Scott Bolton and incumbent councilmen John Sabala and Sid Edwards announced earlier that they wouldn't seek re-election.

Stevenson received 37 votes; Bingham received 32 votes and Jauregui had 37 votes, according to City Clerk Iva Lee Green. The men were elected to four-year terms, which begin in January.

Of 41 people registered, 38 cast votes, Green said.

Castleford

CASTLEFORD — Castleford voters settled an uncontested city election, as expected, returning both incumbents to office.

Nick Welch and Terry Mitton reclaimed their council seats with 27 votes each. Both are beginning their second terms.

Thirty of the town's 63 voters cast ballots Tuesday, said City Clerk Patsy Kinyon. Three ballots were spoiled.

Hagerman

HAGERMAN — Two city councilmen who had filled out unexpired terms of office will return to their seats, Hagerman voters have decided.

David "Rollie" Zollinger won the most support with 81 votes, and William Wilson received 71 votes in Tuesday's balloting, City Clerk Ronda Wickham reported. Five other write-ins received one vote apiece.

Eighty-eight of the town's 253 registered voters went to the polls, Wickham said.

Both Zollinger and Wilson were appointed to office two years ago.

Oakley

OAKLEY — Robyn Fehlman led the voting Tuesday in Oakley, receiving 120 votes to fill one of two city council vacancies.

The other new council member for Oakley is David Burch, who received 78 votes. Also running was Ron Archibald, who lost with 48 votes.

City Clerk Dorothy Robinson said Garth Greenwell, an incumbent who did not seek re-election, received 27 write-in votes and Bob Anderson was given two write-in votes.

Paul

PAUL — Two incumbent City Council members were defeated in the Paul city election Tuesday as challengers Tom Dailey and Darrell Runyon took the winning votes in a four-man race.

Dailey received 150 votes while Runyon polled 97. Incumbent Councilman Jim Brown was next with 91 votes, and Paul Pedersen, also an incumbent, received 70 votes.

City Clerk Judy McLean said 310 votes were cast, which is about two-thirds of the registered voters.

Stanley

STANLEY — Residents of Stanley approved a local option tax Tuesday and re-elected three incumbents and one new city official.

Mayor Lloyd "Bud" James was re-elected with 43 votes, running unopposed for the office.

The local option tax measure was approved by a sizeable margin of 38 votes in favor and only 7 against. City Clerk Joanna Kimpton said the tax will increase city revenue by collecting a 5 percent tax on liquor by the drink and motel rooms rented for 30 days or less.

Voters gave Ronald Krohn, an unopposed incumbent, 42 votes for a two-year council term and named Floris Sullivan with 43 votes and incumbent David Wood with 25 votes to two four-year terms.

Kimpton said 47 voters, or 81 percent of eligible voters, turned out for the election.

Buhl

BUHL — Buhl's retired postmaster and current Councilman Claude McKercher defeated incumbent Mayor James Barker by an overwhelming margin of 519 to 145 in city elections Tuesday.

For the two four-year council seats, incumbent Robert Leitch Jr. collected 509 votes, and Thomas Tappen, a former councilman, brought in 572 votes. Both men were unopposed.

Gooding

GOODING — Both incumbent councilmen lost their seats, in Gooding Tuesday.

Tom Lowman Jr., a six-year veteran of the council, and first-term councilman James V. Muscat lost their seats to newcomers Lawrence Ervin and Henry Morrison.

Sun Valley

SUN VALLEY — The incumbent mayor, one incumbent city councilman and a newcomer to city government were elected in an essentially uncontested race for public offices in Sun Valley.

Mayor Ruth Lieder gained 135 votes on 140 ballots cast Tuesday and incumbent Steve Luber had 124 votes to retain his council seat. Sean McCoy, running for the council for the first time, had 117 votes to take the seat vacated by Councilman John Jones, who did not seek re-election.

Two people received one write-in vote each for mayor, including Wally Huffman, manager of the Sun Valley Co., which has been locked in a bitter legal battle with the city over its local option tax. Huffman is not a resident of the city, however, and is thus ineligible for office.

The other write-in vote for mayor went to Bob McClinton, while five people received either one or two write-in votes for council seats.

Wendell

WENDELL — Wendell Mayor Otto Lemke was re-elected Tuesday with 237 votes, defeating challenger Mike Wetzstein, who had 176 votes.

Incumbent councilman M.M. "Dick" Beck was re-elected with 251 votes. The second open council seat was won by Matthew Bunn with 319 votes. Candidate Walter Dixon was unsuccessful with 185 votes.

Of 936 registered voters in Wendell, 413 voted.

Fairfield

FAIRFIELD — Fairfield residents elected a mayor and four city councilmen Tuesday. Candidates for the positions were unopposed.

Jack Altemose, who had been appointed mayor in October, received 78 votes in his bid to keep that post for four years, City Clerk Glennis Packham reported.

Two men who sought four-year city council terms also were successful in their bids.

Jerry Gibbons, a newcomer to the council, received 83 votes and Brant Vanskike, appointed to the council a year ago, received 78 votes.

Raymond Holford and O.M. Ralph won two-year terms on the council.

Holford, who was appointed to the council about a year ago, received 54 votes. Ralph, who was seeking a second term, garnered 83 votes.

John Shelly received 31 write-in votes, while some other people received five or six write-in votes each, Packham reported.

Ninety-nine people voted Tuesday, which is about half of those who registered, Packham added.

Hazelton

HAZELTON — Voters in Hazelton changed the complexion of their city council on Tuesday, naming a one-month councilman as mayor and placing two new faces as members.

In a 92 percent turnout, the town's voters elected Councilman Roy Crumrine to the mayor's chair over incumbent Mayor Luis Alastra and incumbent Councilman Philip Cochran.

Crumrine outpolled both men easily with 65 votes. Cochran had 27 and Alastra got 15 votes.

First-time candidates Larry Hamby and Jeffre D. Johnson also won council seats. Hamby won 90 votes and Johnson got 80 votes, said City Clerk Jo Ann Wolf.

Luis Alastra, the incumbent mayor, had been appointed to fill out the term of R.L. Brutke, who had resigned in April 1984.

Shoshone

SHOSHONE — Councilman Tim Ridinger, whose term is expiring this year, defeated incumbent Mayor Reid Newby by a large margin in city elections Tuesday.

Ridinger received 248 votes, while Newby attracted 147 votes.

The winners in the race for two four-year seats on the City Council are Thomas "Tim" Dye with 289 votes and Robert J. Casey with 147 votes. Challenger Barbara Smith received 172 write-in votes.

Glenns Ferry

GLENNS FERRY — Glenns Ferry Mayor Dayle Messerly won re-election in the city race against local businesswoman Cheryl Tyler. Messerly outpolled Tyler 254 to 93.

"After 25 years on the city council and as mayor, it's nice to know I've still got friends out there," Messerly said afterward.

In the city council race, incumbent Jesse Fleming won along with Robert Pattison. Fleming tallied 217 votes and Pattison received 175. Trailing Fleming and Pattison was Kit Drewrey with 112 votes, Don Barnhill with 100 votes, and Ferrell Bradbury with 76 votes.

City Clerk Eddie Bostic reported 73 percent of registered voters cast ballots. Bostic said he thought the voter turnout was comparatively good.

Bliss

BLISS — The three incumbent candidates in Bliss have all been returned to office in uncontested races.

Mayor Rolland Zollinger was re-elected with 26 votes. Councilmen Douglas Andrews and Sam Bishop were re-elected with 27 votes each.

James L. Praegitzer

HAILEY — James L. "Jim" Praegitzer, 43, of Hailey, died Monday at the Pocatello Regional Medical Center following a sudden illness.

Born April 9, 1942, in Rupert, he married Marjorie Mahoney on July 8, 1967, in Ketchum. He graduated from Minico High School in 1960, and the College of the Ozarks in Clarksville, Ark., in 1965. He started teaching at the Blaine County schools in 1966.

Surviving are: his wife of Hailey; mother, Esther Praegitzer of Paul; and one brother, Jerry Praegitzer of Boise. He was preceded in death by his father, Karl Praegitzer, in 1982.

Service arrangements are pending and will be announced by the Wood River Chapel in Hailey.

Hughie C. Fitzgerald

JEROME — Hughie C. Fitzgerald, 86, of Jerome, died Tuesday at Saint Benedict's Family Medical Center.

Born Dec. 14, 1898, in Clayton, he was reared and educated around Clayton. He married Nellie Louise Peck on May 12, 1926, in Arco. They were later divorced. They resided in Arco, Mackay and Clayton, where he worked for the Clayton silver mines. He later worked as a powderman helping to build the road from Clayton to Stanley. He moved to Hailey in 1940 and worked at the Triumph mine for several years. He then moved to Seattle and worked for Boeing Aircraft until the war was over, then he moved to Jerome. He later returned to Clayton to work in the silver mines, then he worked as a camp cook in a sheep camp in Challis. He returned to Seattle for a few years and then moved back to Jerome in April 1985.

Surviving are: three sons, Clarence Eugene Fitzgerald of Foresthill, Calif., Jim K. Fitzgerald of Pocatello and Gary Lyle Fitzgerald of Lameda, Calif.; one daughter, Marcella Muriel Burley of Jerome; one sister, Laura West of Seattle; 16 grandchildren; 33 great-grandchildren; and one great-great-grandchild. He was preceded in death by 12 brothers and sisters.

A graveside service will be conducted at 11:30 a.m. Friday at the Jerome Cemetery, with Rev. Bill Hare officiating. Friends may call at the Hove-Robertson Funeral Chapel Thursday from 4 to 8 p.m. and Friday from 9 to 10:30 a.m., and may gather at the cemetery shortly be the service.

Elections

Rupert

RUPERT — Three incumbents — who ran unopposed — were voted back into office Tuesday.

Mayor Bill Whittom won a third term with a total of 350 votes, City Clerk Loretta Klingenberg reported.

Along with Whittom, incumbent Dwinelle Allred was elected to a fourth term on the City Council with 350 votes cast in his favor.

Councilman Ron Klebe sucessfully won a third term with 361 votes.

Klingenberg also reported that William Wilkinsen, who launched a write-in campaign, received 16 write-in votes.

A total of 403 people, or about 31 percent of the city's registered voters, cast ballots in the election. Klingenberg said the voter turn-out was good, considering there only were incumbents on the ballot.

The incumbents will begin their four-year terms in January.

Heyburn

HEYBURN — Two incumbents were returned to office and one new city councilman elected in Heyburn's uncontested vote Tuesday.

Incumbents Harry Badger and Bessie Hurless were returned to office, and Nile Bohon was elected to his first term. The two incumbents won four-year terms, and Bohon will serve two years.

City Clerk Ila Despain said there were numerous write-in votes but nothing to challenge the three whose names appeared on the ballot. She said 163 voters, out of a possible 735, went to the polls.

Badger received 144 votes, Hurless, 145 votes, and Bohon, 140 votes.

Declo

DECLO — Two incumbents were returned to the Declo City Council Tuesday in an election with a "terrible" voter turn-out, according to City Clerk Nelda Matthews.

Kurt Stimpson, who works for AmeriTec, Inc., was elected to his third four-year term with 15 votes.

Andy Anderson, a Boise Cascade employee who was appointed to the council to fill a vacancy, won his bid for a four-year term with 20 votes.

Teacher Jay Darrington received one write-in vote.

A total of 21 people cast votes out of the 30 people who were registered to vote, Matthews said. It was a bad year for voting and registration, she said, adding that in her eight years as city clerk, this election had the lowest voter turn-out.

The incumbents will begin their new terms in office Jan. 1.

Malta

MALTA — A flip of a coin decided the election of one Malta city councilman Tuesday while the other seat was won by the only candidate to seek office in the city election.

Lloyd Schorzman, who ran for one of two available city council positions, received 19 votes. Jerry Bankhead and Terry Briggs each received 17 write-in votes for the other position. The two flipped a coin, and the office went to incumbent Briggs.

Gene Baxter, the town clerk, said 41 of 48 registered voters went to the polls.

Hollister

HOLLISTER — Three incumbents were re-elected to the Hollister City Council Tuesday — one of them by a write-in vote.

City Clerk Carol Fleenor said Mayor Steve Taylor was re-elected with 16 votes, and Jim Fleenor regained his council post, also with 16 votes. They were running unopposed.

There was no candidate for the second council post that was to expire this year. However, incumbent Randy Rutledge was re-elected to the office with 13 write-in votes.

Filer

FILER — Robert Fort, an eight-year member of the City Council, was elected mayor of Filer over Russell "Bud" Sheridan, a current councilman who will continue to serve on the council another two years.

Newcomer Brent Reinke and incumbent Councilman Ron Stokesberry were the main vote-getters in a four-way race for two four-year council seats.

With a turnout of 265 out of 382 registered voters, Fort received 184 votes, Sheridan received 78 votes, and incumbent, Mayor Perry Dyke, who was not running for office, received 20 write-in votes.

Reinke attracted 187 votes and Stokesberry received 157 votes to defeat Twila Knutson with 84 votes and Reba Davis with 77 votes.

Stampede cause baffles Qualls

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The cause of a stampede of about 60 head of horses, most of them gentle riding and brood stock, from their pasture on the rim of Snake River Canyon east of Twin Falls Sunday night remained a mystery Tuesday.

Twin Falls Public Safety Director Tim Qualls, on whose property the horses were pastured, thinks something pretty unusual must have spooked them. The horses ran into and through fences with such force that posts were torn out of the ground and wire was strung 40-50 feet from the fencelines, Qualls said.

Eleven horses were injured, with most suffering only skin-deep wire cuts or bruised and kicked legs. They were being treated Tuesday.

"Some of these horses are 16 and 18 years old," Qualls said. "They were born on the place and have spent their entire lives in these pastures. There had to have been something out of the ordinary to frighten the entire bunch."

He and his family are wondering if a cougar, or some other animal, came out of the canyon and spooked the horses. The herd, including horses owned by the Qualls family and some being boarded on their property, fled the pasture in a single group; normally they run in small groups, Qualls said.

"There were just three horses left on the place when the bunch ran Sunday night. We had put in a new (and tight) fence on one side of the pasture and they took it out as they went," he said.

The horses ran along Falls Avenue East and into several city subdivisions. Qualls said city and county officers attempted to keep the animals from causing traffic accidents and injuries to the public as they ran down the roads and streets in the dark. There were too few officers to corral the animals, Qualls said. Had it not been for volunteer property owners and motorists who came to their assistance, the horses could have gotten into heavy traffic.

Motorists blocked several roads to keep the horses from heading on to Addison Avenue or Blue Lakes Boulevard, and some left their vehicles to help chase the horses on foot.

It was 4 a.m. by the time most of the horses were turned around and driven from Eastland Avenue north to Pole Line Road and along the canyon into their home pasture. Qualls said two of the horses were not found until Monday afternoon; one, a 2-year-old sorrel filly, is still missing.

Qualls said he and his family plan to check tracks along the canyon in an effort to determine what frightened the horses. They are used to dogs, and there have been deer in the pasture in the past without stirring up the horses, Qualls said.

Supreme Court hears fire suit appeal

By PAT MARCANTONIO
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Lawyers fired up oral arguments Tuesday before the Idaho Supreme Court over a case involving a December 1981 blaze that destroyed The Wendell Department Store and Hamilton Drug Store.

The justices have been hearing appeals since Monday in one of the court's regular visits to Twin Falls. The session will wind up today.

The case — Tuesday matched Jerome Thriftway Drug Inc., an Idaho corporation that operated the drug store, and its partner, L & M Securities, against Everett and Erma Winslow, the owners of the Wendell Department Store, and the MacQuivey-Trounson families, owners of the building who leased it to the Winslows.

The drug store owners filed suit against the families, alleging that the fire originated in the department store because of faulty wiring and negligently maintained electrical equipment and wiring. As a result, the fire spread to the drug store in the adjoining building and demolished it, the suit charged.

Jerome Thriftway and L & M Securities lost their case against the Winslows in a District Court jury trial. Fifth District Court Judge Phillip Becker of Gooding had ruled in favor of the MacQuivey-Trounson families in a summary judgment before the trial. Both these losses were appealed to the Idaho Supreme Court.

Attorney Jeff Stoker, representing the drug store owners, said Tuesday that experts had testified at the trial that the fire started in an office at the back of the department store. In addition, the store owners had total control of the store and of what happened there.

The Winslows had been warned by a fire official before the fire about upgrading the electrical and fire prevention equipment in the old building, Stoker said.

One of the issues Stoker laid before the court was that of the responsibility of the Winslows to the neighboring drug store.

"I'm not so sure it isn't taking a step backward in negligence law," Stoker said.

Attorney Walt Sinclair of Twin Falls argued on behalf of the Winslows that there had been no evidence to show exactly how or where the fire started. The people who first spotted the blaze saw a red glow in the back of a doctor's office adjoining the department store.

A defense witness had testified that any evidence of the source of the fire was obliterated by the fire, Sinclair told the justices, who asked questions of both attorneys.

Sinclair also said the fire official who told the Winslows about upgrading the wiring and equipment said that to everyone in town. And that because wiring was old it was not necessarily hazardous. The Winslows weren't aware of any problems, Sinclair said.

"The fact that there is a fire doesn't infer negligence," Sinclair said.

He also asked about the equity in the case, since the Winslows lost everything in the fire.

Kevin Tramor, an attorney for the MacQuivey-Trounson families, said his clients weren't aware of any problems with the building. Under the families' lease with the Winslows, the lessees were responsible for upkeep and repairs.

The justices took the case under advisement.

Elections

Rupert

RUPERT — Three incumbents — who ran unopposed — were voted back into office Tuesday.

Mayor Bill Whittom won a third term with a total of 350 votes, City Clerk Loretta Klingenberg reported.

Along with Whittom, incumbent Dwinelle Allred was elected to a fourth term on the City Council with 350 votes cast in his favor.

Councilman Ron Klebe sucessfully won a third term with 361 votes.

Klingenberg also reported that William Wilkinsen, who launched a write-in campaign, received 16 write-in votes.

A total of 403 people, or about 31 percent of the city's registered voters, cast ballots in the election. Klingenberg said the voter turn-out was good, considering there only were incumbents on the ballot.

The incumbents will begin their four-year terms in January.

Filer

FILER — Robert Fort, an eight-year member of the City Council was elected mayor of Filer over Russell "Bud" Sheridan, a current councilman who will continue to serve on the council another two years.

Newcomer Brent Reinke and incumbent — Councilman — Ron Stokesberry were the main vote-getters in a four-way race for two four-year council seats.

With a turnout of 265 out of 382 registered voters, Fort received 164 votes, Sheridan received 78 votes, and incumbent Mayor Perry Dyke, who was not running for office, received 20 write-in votes.

Reinke attracted 187 votes and Stokesberry received 157 votes to defeat Twila Knutson with 84 votes and Reba Davis with 77 votes.

Heyburn

HEYBURN — Two incumbents were returned to office and one new city councilman elected in Heyburn's uncontested vote Tuesday.

Incumbents Harry Badger and Bessie Hurless were returned to office, and Nile Bohon was elected to his first term. The two incumbents won four-year terms, and Bohon will serve two years.

City Clerk Ila Despain said there were numerous write-in votes but nothing to challenge the three whose names appeared on the ballot. She said 163 voters, out of a possible 735, went to the polls.

Badger received 144 votes, Hurless 145 votes, and Bohon, 140 votes.

Malta

MALTA — A flip of a coin decided the election of one Malta city councilman Tuesday while the other seat was won by the only candidate to seek office in the city election.

Lloyd Schorzman, who ran for one of two available city council positions, received 19 votes. Jerry Bankhead and Terry Briggs each received 17 write-in votes for the other position. The two flipped a coin, and the office went to incumbent Briggs.

Gene Baxter, the town clerk, said 41 of 48 registered voters went to the polls.

Declo

DECLO — Two incumbents were returned to the Declo City Council Tuesday in an election with a "terrible" voter turn-out, according to City Clerk Nelda Matthews.

Kurt Stimpson, who works for Amcor Inc., was elected to his third four-year term with 15 votes.

Andy Anderson, a Boise Cascade employee who was appointed to the council to fill a vacancy, won his bid for a four-year term with 20 votes.

Teacher Jay Darrington received one write-in vote.

A total of 21 people cast votes out of the 39 people who were registered to vote, Matthews said. It was a bad year for voting and registration, she said, adding that in her eight years as city clerk, this election had the lowest voter turn-out.

The incumbents will begin their new terms in office Jan. 1.

Hollister

HOLLISTER — Three incumbents were re-elected to the Hollister City Council Tuesday — one of them by a write-in vote.

City Clerk Carol Fleenor said Mayor Steve Taylor was re-elected with 16 votes, and Jim Fleenor regained his council post, also with 16 votes. They were running unopposed.

There was no candidate for the second council post that was to expire this year. However, incumbent Randy Rutledge was re-elected to the office with 13 write-in votes.

Stampede cause baffles Qualls

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The cause of a stampede of about 60 head of horses, most of them gentle riding and brood stock, from their pasture on the rim of Snake River Canyon east of Twin Falls Sunday night remained a mystery Tuesday.

Twin Falls Public Safety Director Tim Qualls, on whose property the horses were pastured, thinks something pretty unusual must have spooked them. The horses ran into and through fences with such force that posts were torn out of the ground and wire was strung 40-50 feet from the fencelines, Qualls said.

Eleven horses were injured, with most suffering only skin-deep wire cuts or bruised and kicked legs. They were being treated Tuesday.

"Some of these horses are 16 and 18 years old," Qualls said. "They were born on the place and have spent their entire lives in these pastures. There had to have been something out of the ordinary to frighten the entire bunch."

He and his family are wondering if a cougar, or some other animal, came out of the canyon and spooked the horses. The herd, including horses owned by the Qualls family and some being boarded on their property, fled the pasture in a single group; normally they run in small groups, Qualls said.

"There were just three horses left on the place when the bunch ran Sunday night. We had put in a new (and light) fence on one side of the pasture and they took it out as they went," he said.

The horses ran along Falls Avenue East and into several city subdivisions. Qualls said city and county officers attempted to keep the animals from causing traffic accidents and injuries to the public as they ran down the roads and streets in the dark. There were too few officers to corral the animals, Qualls said. Had it not been for volunteer property owners and motorists who came to their assistance, the horses could have gotten into heavy traffic.

Motorists blocked several roads to keep the horses from heading on to Addison Avenue or Blue Lakes Boulevard, and some left their vehicles to help chase the horses on foot.

It was 4 a.m. by the time most of the horses were turned around and driven from Eastland Avenue north to Pole Line Road and along the canyon into their home pasture. Qualls said two of the horses were not found until Monday afternoon; one, a 2-year-old sorrel filly, is still missing.

Qualls said he and his family plan to check tracks along the canyon in an effort to determine what frightened the horses. They are used to dogs, and there have been deer in the pasture in the past without stirring up the horses, Qualls said.

Supreme Court hears fire suit appeal

By PAT MARCANTONIO
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Lawyers fired up oral arguments Tuesday before the Idaho Supreme Court over a case involving a December 1981 blaze that destroyed The Wendell Department Store and Hamilton Drug Store.

The justices have been hearing appeals since Monday in one of the court's regular visits to Twin Falls. The session will wind up today.

The case Tuesday matched Jerome Thriftway Drug Inc., an Idaho corporation that operated the drug store, and its partner, L & M Securities, against Everett and Erma Winslow, the owners of the Wendell Department Store, and the MacQuivey-Trounson families, owners of the building who leased it to the Winslows.

The drug store owners filed suit against the families, alleging that the fire originated in the department store because of faulty wiring and negligently maintained electrical equipment and wiring. As a result, the fire spread to the drug store in the adjoining building and demolished it, the suit charged.

Jerome Thriftway and L & M Securities lost their case against the Winslows in a District Court jury trial. Fifth District Court Judge Phillip Becker of Gooding had ruled in favor of the MacQuivey-Trounson families in a summary judgment before the trial. Both these losses were appealed to the Idaho Supreme Court.

Attorney Jeff Stoker, representing the drug store owners, said Tuesday that experts had testified at the trial that the fire started in an office at the back of the department store. In addition, the store owners had total control of the store and of what happened there.

The Winslows had been warned by a fire official before the fire about upgrading the electrical and fire prevention equipment in the old building, Stoker said.

One of the issues Stoker laid before the court was that of the responsibility of the Winslows to the neighboring drug store.

"I'm not so sure it isn't taking a step backward in negligence law," Stoker said.

Attorney Walt Sinclair of Twin Falls argued on behalf of the Winslows that there had been no evidence to show exactly how or where the fire started. The people who first spotted the blaze saw a red glow in the back of a doctor's office adjoining the department store.

A defense witness had testified that any evidence of the source of the fire was obliterated by the fire, Sinclair told the justices, who asked questions of both attorneys.

Sinclair also said the fire official who told the Winslows about upgrading the wiring and equipment said that to everyone in town. And that because wiring was old it was not necessarily hazardous. The Winslows weren't aware of any problems, Sinclair said.

"The fact that there is a fire doesn't infer negligence," Sinclair said.

He also asked about the equity in the case, since the Winslows lost everything in the fire.

Kevin Trainor, an attorney for the MacQuivey-Trounson families, said his clients weren't aware of any problems with the building. Under the families' lease with the Winslows, the lessees were responsible for upkeep and repairs.

The justices took the case under advisement.

Filer and Jerome students collect journalism awards

SUN VALLEY — Students from Filer and Jerome were among local winners at the annual Idaho Journalism Advisers Association Conference held here Oct. 27-29.

Individual winners from Filer, which came in seventh place in the sweepstakes, placed in three various contests. Gary Moon carried second place for yearbook caption writing, Heidi Thompson was awarded second place for yearbook copy writing, and Rachel Rupprecht received an honorable mention for editorial cartoons.

Jerome placed ninth in the sweepstakes, with individual winners placing in two different contests. Mike Babcock won first place in the Idaho Lakes Blvd. N. and placed her purse under her chair. She did not miss it until after she left. When she returned, it was missing.

Purse holding $2,500 stolen

TWIN FALLS — Kaye Latham told Twin Falls police Monday that someone took her purse containing money and rings worth $2,500, when she accidentally left it in a local restaurant.

She said the incident occurred Oct. 30, between 1 and 2 p.m. Latham was dining at the Taco Bandido at 275 Blue Lakes Blvd. N. and placed her purse under her chair. She did not miss it until after she left. When she returned, it was missing.

In Twin Falls: 734-6329

Larry Craig — Republican

Richard Stallings — Democrat

The House on Oct. 31 rejected an attempt to shelve all new spending proposals including liberalized welfare payments from its deficit reduction package. The proposal lost, 183-238.

Larry Craig: Yes | Richard Stallings: No

The House on Oct. 30 restored $1.2 billion to buy 12 MX missiles that it had cut by an extremely close vote earlier. Members defeated the amendment to strip MX funding from the 1986 defense appropriations bill, 210-214. No vote was with the majority voting against the cuts.

Larry Craig: No | Richard Stallings: Yes

Senate

Evans target of GOP campaign charge

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Republican Senatorial Committee has accused Democratic Gov. John Evans of violating federal campaign finance laws through questionable transfers from his now-defunct state political treasury to the coffers for his still undeclared challenge to Idaho GOP Sen. Steve Symms. Officials at the Evans for Senate Committee were still checking the complaint filed with the Federal Elections Commission and had no immediate comment today. Campaign Manager Kathi Rogers said it would probably be later in the week before the campaign responds.

The Republican campaign committee alleged that the Evans Senate campaign initially transferred to its treasury nearly $4,000 in contributions made to the chief executive during past state political races that are considered illegal under federal laws and then tried to mask the violation by amending the initial report of the transaction to show the questionable money was actually legally disbursed.

"Illegal activity by a candidate in the opening stages of a campaign for federal office is a serious offense, but may be mitigated should the commission find it was genuinely inadvertent," the complaint said. It was filed with the commission late last week by the Washington law firm of Wiley and Rein.

It asked the FEC to thoroughly investigate the allegations made against the Evans camp, reach an agreement to ensure that no further violations occur and impose any penalties considered appropriate.

Specifically, the complaint contended that Evans forces filed reports early this year showing that the governor had officially closed out his gubernatorial campaign treasury on March 18, transferring the total balance of just over $11,300 to his Senate campaign warchest.

But that amount, the complaint said, included a $1,050 contribution from an individual supporter, two contributions directly from corporations and one contribution directly from a labor union. While all those contributions are legal under state laws, federal law prohibits individual contributions to congressional campaigns in excess of $1,000 and direct corporate or labor union contributions. Those entities can only contribute to federal campaigns indirectly through political action committees.

The GOP complaint indicated, however, that shortly after the transaction Evans campaign officials "evidently determined that the funds transferred included money not legally permitted in a federal campaign," and they then filed amended reports showing that the questionable money was split between the Democratic Governor's Association and the state Democratic Party with only some $7,300 actually deposited in the Senate campaign coffers.

The contributions in question were $1,050 from Robert L. Harney, $1,000 from the J.C. Penney Co. Inc., $250 from Kaiser Aluminum and just over $1,900 from the Teamsters Joint Council 37 Political Fund.

The complaint alleged that once the problem was discovered, the Evans campaign could have refunded the questionable money to the gubernatorial committee.

"Instead, it appears that both committees may have entered into a concerted attempt to conceal the illegal transfer, the complaint said.

Mill union wants sale of timber to proceed

BOISE (AP) — The issue, says which at least temporarily will block, sawmill union spokesman Bill Cooper is not politics. It's jobs.

Cooper and others told a Boise news conference they want Idaho officials to urge the Forest Service to allow immediate bidding on a burned-over forest area near McCall. Timber in the 14,000-acre area is needed to keep a Boise Cascade sawmill at Cascade in full operation.

Without the timber, said Cooper, up to 40 jobs will be lost, and indirectly, 100 people will feel the impact.

Repeating a statement made earlier by Lt. Gov. David Leroy, the Republican candidate for governor, Cooper urged former Idaho governor Cecil Andrus to intervene and urge the Forest Service to allow the sale.

Cooper denied politics is involved, identifying himself as a Democrat.

But he said his group doesn't want to go to Gov. John Evans. The Democratic governor's views on wilderness are well-known, he said.

About 14,000 acres of timber in the Fall Creek area of the Payette National Forest, 30 to 40 miles north and west of McCall, was damaged by summer forest fires.

The Forest Service planned to put the timber up for salvage bidding on Monday. But an environmental group, the Idaho Natural Resource Legal Foundation, filed an appeal, the Forest Service has not studied the environmental impact of the sale. It could allow road-building and logging into the currently roadless Carey Creek area, the group claims.

Cooper and Joni Fields, Idaho Women in Timber spokeswoman, said the timber needs to be salvaged quickly. Cooper said a burned area is good for about six months after a fire; after that, the timber deteriorates rapidly.

Unless logged by next spring, all the timber in the burned area will be lost, he said.

Workers at the Cascade sawmill have been advised Boise Cascade needs 31 million board-feet of timber per year to keep one shift busy.

Cooper said there are about 2,400 acres of good timber in the burned area and about 28 million board-feet in all could be harvested.

"This is our livelihood," said Ms. Fields. "If we do not have timber, we do not have that sawmill."

Leroy issued a news release Oct. 28 urging Andrus to help block the legal action that has stopped the proposed timber sale. Leroy declared it "not a partisan issue, this is an Idaho issue with hundreds of Idaho jobs on the line."

Evidence ruled insufficient

COEUR d'ALENE (AP) — Insufficient testimony was presented at a warrant hearing to allow evidence seized at the homes of Potlatch's former police chief and his son to be used in their upcoming trials, a judge has ruled.

Ronald Sterley, 48, and his son Tony, 26, are scheduled to stand trial Dec. 2 on drug charges stemming from two alleged cocaine deals in Coeur d'Alene. The elder Sterly was Potlatch police chief at the time of his arrest. He has since been fired.

Officers searching the elder Sterley's house reportedly found part of the $600 he allegedly received in one of the drug deals. They discovered drug paraphernalia in the son's house, prosecutors said.

First District Judge Watt Prather said Monday that one of a police officer's statements to Magistrate John Maynard of Moscow, about the drug deal being set up, left "a great deal of speculation."

The warrant was issued following the March hearing.

New regional lender called threat to PCA

BOISE (AP) — The president of the Eastern Idaho Production Credit Association says if a new regional farm lending organization is allowed to operate in its territory, it will wipe out his Pocatello-based association.

"No doubt about it. I think it will be a kind of slow death for us, I really do," said J. Elden Hill, EIPCA president, in federal court testimony here Tuesday.

The Eastern Idaho PCA and others like it make short-term operating loans to farmers. In an effort to strengthen farm-lending organizations, 21 associations in five Western states voted earlier this year to merge.

The Eastern Idaho PCA and one in Montana did not approve the merger.

The Pocatello-based organization claims in a federal court lawsuit that the new regional association is trying to infringe on its territory. And Hill claimed that if the new federal intermediate Credit Bank of Spokane is allowed to come into its territory and make farm loans, that probably will wipe out EIPCA.

U.S. District Judge Ray McNichols is hearing the lawsuit without a jury. Testimony continues today.

Hill said the Spokane association has taken out newspaper ads in the region, soliciting business.

When asked by attorney Louis Racine whether EIPCA needs outside help in providing loans to its area farmers, Hill said, "We've served the people of our area for 52 years. I see no need for another agency."

Racine asked whether there were some areas where farmers were refused operating loans by EIPCA.

Hill said his association took over the territory served by the defunct Southern Idaho Production Credit Association, Twin Falls. That included the Twin Falls-Gooding-Burley areas, he said.

The Southern Idaho PCA had nearly 1,200 loans outstanding; EIPCA took over the best of them, Hill said. "We had to put in some new loan policies," he said.

Farmers in the Southern Idaho PCA area had to be charged a higher interest rate than farmers in the Pocatello association territory, he said, to build a reserve to offset losses from SIPCA loans.

EPA tells Envirosafe to clean up silos

SEATTLE (AP) — Envirosafe Services of Idaho Inc. has been ordered by the federal government to launch a long-range program that will eventually lead to eliminating hazardous waste leakage from abandoned Titan missile silos at its southwestern Idaho dump site.

The order, issued by the Environmental Protection Agency regional office in Seattle, is the first in the Northwest under the agency's new congressional authority to force clean-up of hazardous waste problems at any active dump. It is also one of the first such orders issued nationwide.

The new authority is in addition to EPA's power to mandate cleanup of abandoned hazardous waste sites under the Superfund program.

The toxic organic solvents, which were stored in the missile silos before Envirosafe began operating the dump at Grand View, have been found to be leaking into soil and underground water supplies.

Although Envirosafe was not responsible for the storage, the new EPA authority makes the company responsible for ensuring there are no adverse health or environmental impacts.

The company, however, has been cited by both the EPA and the Occupational Safety and Health Administration in the past for violations of various federal hazardous waste handling and disposal laws in connection with its operation of the facility.

Under the new EPA order, Envirosafe must immediately begin decontaminating any tainted groundwater supplies around the silos based on the results of monthly test-well monitoring. It must also assess the potential health and environmental effects of the toxic leaks and develop a method for ensuring groundwater quality in the area.

Boise to pursue charge against candidate

BOISE (AP) — The city of Boise will pursue a charge of obscene conduct against City Council candidate James Sorrell, after agreeing once to drop the matter, City Attorney W.H. "Buzz" Fawcett said.

Sorrell immediately called the move illegal, claiming Tuesday that Fawcett's announcement was timed to scuttle his chances in the municipal election.

Sorrell was accused of exposing himself to a female driver at a Boise intersection at 1:15 a.m. June 27. He pleaded innocent to the charge, and the city agreed to drop the misdemeanor count if Sorrell underwent a psychological interview at the state Health and Welfare Department, participated in counseling if a psychologist deemed it necessary, and broke no laws other than minor traffic ordinances within the next six months.

Fawcett would not disclose what the report said, or exactly why the city decided to prosecute Sorrell. He said he did not want to elaborate because of the pending trial.

Murder conviction to be reconsidered

BOISE (AP) — A decade-old murder case involving a former Jobs Corps member is back in the courts again.

Landis Dillard was convicted of stabbing an elderly teacher with a pair of scissors while enrolled at the former Job Corps center at Marsing. Dillard, who was age 17 when the crime was committed, was tried and convicted as an adult three years after the crime.

On Nov. 18, the Court of Appeals will hear Dillard's claim that he did not receive a timely trial, and that he did not receive effective assistance of counsel because his attorney failed to file an appeal on time.

County evicts family from public housing

PROVO, Utah (AP) — Utah County officials say they are taking steps to make sure they don't repeat a mistake that gave an ineligible family a subsidized home for more than two years at taxpayers' expense.

The family, which county housing director Gene Carly said reported its income as being lower than it actually was, somehow was not disqualified during the county's screening process.

They misrepresented the amount of income that they had, and as soon as we found out what was happening, we evicted them," he said. "The whole thing is rather embarrassing."

The fraud cost the county $6,000, and now officials want to take legal action against the family to discourage others from doing the same thing, Carly said.

"The problem is there isn't any law to help us out. We had federal housing people come in on this and they didn't want to prosecute because the amount of money is less than $10,000," he said.

"If word of this gets out, we could have lots of problems," said Utah County Commision Chairman Gary Anderson.

Deputy Utah County Attorney Guy Burningham said state laws cover giving false information, but none would apply to social service agencies.

"The problem is that they didn't physically take anything," Burningham said. "Their rent was reduced, but I still think we could prove they misrepresented themselves and win in court."

South African government pulls back activist's passport

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The government overruled a court Tuesday and confiscated the passport of the Rev. Allan Boesak, an anti-apartheid activist who had planned to travel to the United States this month to accept a humanitarian award.

The decision was announced by Minister of Home Affairs Stoffel Botha, who gave no explanation.

Boesak, who is of mixed race, accused the government of pettiness.

"This government has no respect for the courts or the rule of law," he said, adding that his lawyers will consider an appeal.

Boesak, president of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, had intended to go to Washington on Nov. 20 to accept the Robert F. Kennedy Human Rights Award.

Security police arrested Boesak on Aug. 27, the eve of a mass march he vowed to lead through Cape Town to demand that black rights leader Nelson Mandela be freed from Pollsmoor Prison.

Outdoor gatherings have been illegal since 1976, and Boesak was held under wide-ranging security laws that allow detention of anyone who police suspect might commit a crime.

The flap over Boesak came as government radio said police will investigate whether a Cape Town newspaper editor violated new security laws by publishing a lengthy interview with the chief of the guerrilla group fighting apartheid.

Also Tuesday, officials said Mandela was successfully recuperating from surgery Sunday that removed a swollen prostate gland.

REV. ALLAN BOESAK
Can't receive award

Imprisoned for life in 1964 for plan ning sabotage against white rule, Mandela, 67, is considered the most prominent prisoner of apartheid and most influential black South African.

Boesak, 39, and two other South Africans — white cleric Frederick Beyers Naude and Mandela's wife Winnie — are the 1985 winners of the two-year-old Robert F. Kennedy Memorial Fund award named after the U.S. senator who was assassinated on June 5, 1968.

The awards, which carry a total prize of $50,000, are to be presented Nov. 20 on the anniversary of Robert Kennedy's 60th birthday. Because Mrs. Mandela and Boesak do not have passports, only Beyers Naude — secretary general of the South African Council of Churches — is expected to attend.

The issue of Boesak's passport arose Monday in a courtroom outside Cape Town, where his lawyers won a reduction in bail conditions that included returning his confiscated passport.

The court said it believed Boesak would reappear for his trial, the date of which has not been set.

Boesak said lifting his passport will damage South Africa's already tarnished overseas image. He said he thought the government would have been more sensitive.

The action served no purpose "except to strengthen the view of the international community that the government is seeking to throw a blanket of silence over the unrest and in particular the voices of opposition," said parliamentary opposition leader Alex Boraine, a white.

Boraine, of the anti-apartheid Progressive Federal Party, said the move "will harden attitudes and make it more difficult for South Africa to resolve the enormous problems facing all of us."

Meanwhile, government radio said Minister of Law and Order Louis le Grange ordered an investigation into the publication of an interview with Oliver Tambo, leader of the African National Congress. The interview was carried Monday by the Cape Times, South Africa's oldest newspaper.

It now is illegal to quote banned people and members of banned groups, and is a crime to "further the aims of a banned organization." Punishment can be up to 10 years in prison.

Times editor Anthony Heard told readers in an editor's note that he believed publishing the interview would help South Africans reach across the racial divide. The editor said Tambo, whose guerrillas plant bombs and mount occasional commando attacks, came across as a moderate.

Reporters are no longer allowed free access to riot-prone areas, but police said Tuesday that there were no new deaths on top of the more than 800 killed since Sept. 3, 1984, when the anti-apartheid riots began. Most of the victims were black. The government has said about two-thirds were killed by government forces, while the others were killed by fellow blacks who suspected them of collaborating with the white regime.

Police reported South African townships mostly quiet Tuesday.

Diplomat found dead in Moscow

MOSCOW (AP) — A Mexican diplomat who was a Soviet-trained scientist and his maid were found shot to death in the diplomat's Moscow apartment, the Mexican Embassy said Tuesday.

The incident was a rare and unexplained case of violence involving foreigners in Moscow.

Manuel Portilla Quevedo, 43, a counselor at the Mexican Embassy since 1981, and his Mexican maid, Maria del Carmen Cruz, were found Oct. 31 when diplomats from the embassy went to investigate why Portilla had not shown up for work, the embassy's statement said.

"Dr. Portilla had received a blow with a blunt instrument and then (was) shot in the head," the statement said. "Miss Cruz was severely beaten and shot twice in the head."

An embassy official, who spoke on condition he not be identified, said the two apparently died the night of Oct. 30.

No explanation was given for the deaths. Embassy officials refused to discuss whether they involved a premeditated attack, random violence or possible suicide.

Cases of violence involving foreigners are rare in Moscow. The last known foreigner in Moscow who died violently was British businessman Dennis Skinner, who fell to his death from his 12th-floor apartment in June 1983.

Soviet authorities concluded no criminal activity was involved, but a coroner's inquest in Britain determined there was an unlawful death but did not accuse anyone.

Mexican Embassy second secretary Eusevio del Cueto said Portilla was married and the father of four children but apparently lived alone at the time of his death.

Marcos foe says time too short

WASHINGTON (AP) — A leader of the opposition to Philippines President Ferdinand Marcos said Tuesday that Marcos' call for elections in January is not enough time for opponents to prepare but that he will take part anyway.

"We have little choice," Salvador Laurel told a news conference at the Capitol. "We must unite and win for the future of the Philippines."

Laurel, who has already been nominated to run for president by the United Nationalist Democratic Organization, said Marcos must be defeated because "the country is at the brink of bankruptcy, at the trembling edge of revolution."

Laurel was in the United States on a speaking trip when Marcos announced Sunday that elections will be held Jan. 17. Laurel said he will cut short his trip and return to Manila on Thursday to meet with opposition leaders and try to plan a strategy to unite Marcos' opponents.

But Laurel suggested that March 17 would be a better date to hold the elections and would give opponents a better chance at beating the man who has been in power for 20 years.

"At it is now, the election campaign will have to cover most of Christmas and the New Year, which is almost sacrilegious in a country as Catholic as ours," he said.

"We don't have the resources Marcos has," he told a breakfast seminar. "We need more time if this is going to be an honest-to-goodness election."

If voters think the election isn't fair, "it may explode into a violent confrontation on election day," Laurel said. Opponents are "prepared to protect our ballots with our lives."

After the seminar, Laurel went to the Capitol for a brief meeting with Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., followed by a news conference in Cranston's office.

Cranston said, "It is important that we do all we can to see that the elections are free and fair" and called for Marcos to step down while the campaign is conducted.

Cranston called Marcos "the best ally the Soviet Union has in the Philippines" because his oppressive policies have allowed a communist insurgency to flourish.

Salvador's Duarte pays visit to Spain

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Jose Napoleon Duarte, president of El Salvador, arrived in Madrid Tuesday for two days of talks with Spanish leaders.

Duarte was accompanied by his wife and daughter Ines, who recently was freed after being held captive for 44 days by anti-government guerrillas in El Salvador.

King Juan Carlos and Queen Sofia were at the airport to greet the Duartes, who flew in from Paris after a one-day private visit there.

Universal Foods expanding

MILWAUKEE — Universal Foods Corp., which recently purchased Idaho Frozen Foods Corp. of Twin Falls, has signed a letter of intent to acquire Universal Group Limited, an Indianapolis-based manufacturer of flavors and fragrances.

Terms of the agreement were not disclosed in an announcement late last week.

Universal Foods chairman and chief executive John L. Murray said that the privately-held Universal Group, which operates in the United States, Canada and Mexico, has annual revenues exceeding $75 million.

"This transaction is a major step in our strategic effort to become a primary source of key ingredients sold to the food industry," he said.

Universal Group will gain capital needed for growth, as well as technical and marketing expertise, chairman Lawrence J. Noling said.

Universal Foods manufactures and markets food ingredients such as yeast, seasonings, flavors and colors. It also markets selected consumer food items.

M-K reassigns management

BOISE (AP) — Morrison Knudsen Corp. has announced changes in its senior management echelons.

W.J. Deasy, Morrison Knudsen president and chief executive officer, said Monday that Robert K. Woodhead, 60, former senior corporate vice president, was elected executive vice president and chief financial officer at a board of directors meeting on Nov. 1.

Samuel H. Crossland, 56, former vice president, secretary and general counsel, also was elevated at the meeting to the position of senior vice president, secretary and general counsel, Deasy said.

He said the board also made two major changes at the executive-management level of two Morrison Knudsen wholly owned subsidiaries.

Automotive recalls decline

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of automotive recalls initiated in the past year was well below historical figures, and new government investigations into cars with potential safety defects dropped sharply, a private auto safety group said Monday.

The Center for Auto Safety said its analysis of recall and investigation statistics showed that automakers undertook 214 recalls during fiscal 1985, compared with annual averages of 295 in the decade before the Reagan administration took office.

It also said the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration opened 77 new investigations into potential safety defects in fiscal 1985, down 35 percent from the previous year and about half the average under the previous administration.

Carmakers refused to fully comply with government-requested voluntary recalls in eight of 10 cases, it added.

NHTSA officials said they could not confirm or deny the statistics and had no immediate comment.

Belzbergs go after Potlatch

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — The Belzberg family has offered almost $700 million U.S. in a bid for control of an American forest products company, a spokesman said Monday.

The family's offer is conditional on Potlatch Corp. of San Francisco withdrawing an anti-takeover measure, said Gayle Stewart-Gray of Belzberg-controlled First City Financial Corp.

Potlatch has said it intends to give four votes to each share held by its owner for at least four years.

The Belzbergs have held their 4.4 percent interest in Potlatch for less than four years.

"Your proposal is a blatant violation of the historic one-share, one-vote principle which has been fundamental to New York Stock Exchange-listed companies for more than 50 years," First City chairman Saul Belzberg said in an Oct. 24 letter to Potlatch chairman Richard Madden.

The Belzberg-Madden correspondence is contained in documents the Belzbergs filed Monday with the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission in Washington, D.C.

Stock price jumped $6⅞ to $42⅞ on a turnover of 543,000 shares in 5½ hours on the New York exchange.

T-bill yields turn downward

WASHINGTON (AP) — Yields on short-term Treasury securities fell in Monday's auctions following two weeks of increases.

The Treasury Department sold $7.2 billion in three-month bills at an average discount rate of 7.21 percent, down from 7.24 percent last week. Another $7.2 billion was sold in six-month bills at an average discount rate of 7.3 percent, down from 7.37 percent last week.

The rates were the lowest since three-month bills sold for 7.18 percent on Oct. 21 and six-month bills averaged 7.24 percent on Sept. 30.

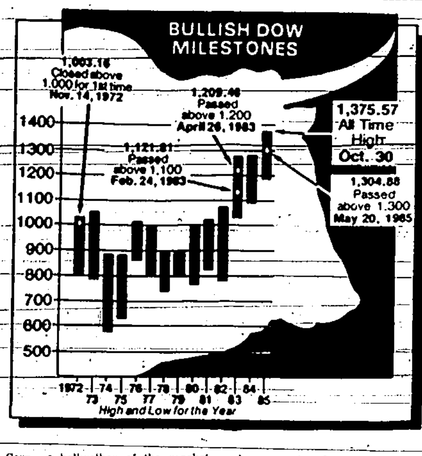
Dow hits another high

By PETER COY
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The stock market showed broad strength Tuesday as the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials set another record, reflecting traders' hopes for non-inflationary growth in the U.S. economy.

The Dow Jones average was stalled for most of the day but surged in the final hours of trading to close near the 1,400 level, rising 6.99 to a record 1396.67.

Volume on the New York Stock Exchange rose to 119.20 million shares from 104.94 million on Monday.



Five issues rose in price for every three that fell on the NYSE.

Analysts said the overall strength of stocks eased fears that blue-chip stocks were getting ahead of the rest of the market, something that might set the stage for a sharp sell-off.

Among the 105 NYSE-listed stocks hitting 52-week highs during Tuesday's trading were American Broadcasting Cos., which closed up ⅛ at 118¼; Chrysler Corp., which closed up 1 at 41¼; Eli Lilly, up 1¾ at 95¾; and PepsiCo Inc., up ⅞ at 65¼.

Twenty stocks hit 52-week lows.

International Business Machines Corp., a bellwether of the market because of its prominence in the portfolios of investing institutions such as pension funds, rose 1⅛ to close at 133⅞ on heavy volume of 1.8 million shares.

The Dow Jones averages of transportation, utility and stock issues also rose.

The market seemed to take heart from prospects of lower oil prices. Venezuela reduced the price of its heavy crude oil by 40 cents a barrel, matching a cut by Mexico last week.

Also, Ecuadorian President Leon Febres Cordero was quoted in Venezuela as saying that were his country to abide by Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries production quotas, "chaos would break loose, the republic would fall and the democratic system would come to an end."

Nationwide turnover in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 142.87 million shares.

Standard & Poor's index of 400 industrials rose 1.20 to 213.72, and S&P's 500-stock composite index was up 1.12 at 192.43.

The NASDAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market climbed 1.02 to 295.25. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index closed at 230.24, up .65.

Falling oil prices keep investors away

Prototype steam engine on sale block

HUNTINGTON, W.Va. (AP) — A coal-powered steam locomotive used to test the feasibility of switching from diesel fuel has been put up for sale because of a lack of investors and the drop in oil prices.

Locomotive No. 614, a 1948 "Greenbrier"-type steam engine, has a price tag of $500,000 — "and not a dime less," said owner Ross Rowland, a Wall Street commodities broker.

No. 614 hauled coal on the Chessie System's main line last January between Huntington and Hinton, in southern West Virginia, to publicize Rowland's plan to build a prototype steam engine that would be competitive with diesel-electric engines.

However, he said last week: "We've come up against a problem. The substantial excess capacity in the oil industry manifested in the decline of crude oil prices has reduced the urgency of finding alternate fuel sources."

Rowland organized American Coal Enterprises a few years ago to develop the ACE 3000, a $40 million computer-controlled steam locomotive that would burn coal rather than oil.

When investors were slow to put their money into its development, Rowland scaled down the plan to a $15 million ACE 6000 model, but investors still balked, saying the scaled-down version would not be competitive.

Rowland also said too much has been invested in the production of diesel locomotives for companies to switch to steam engines.

"No one wants to go against General Electric or General Motors, the nation's major suppliers of diesel locomotives," Rowland said.

Rowland is still trying to put together another investment package for the ACE engine but in the meantime has put No. 614 and passenger cars it pulled during the test runs up for sale.

"We won't sell to the first person who comes along with the money," he said. "We want to be convinced the equipment will have a good home."

Despite the lack of interest by investors, Rowland said he is optimistic that the project will be completed.

"The project is feasible; it's important for the nation, and we intend to keep going until we win."

Rude prefers flying planes to airline

Executive more comfortable in cockpit

TACOMA (AP) — Tacoma business executive Richard Rude says he feels more comfortable at the controls of an airplane than at the controls of an airline — or any other company.

In April he was given control of Wien Airlines by a federal bankruptcy judge. Late last week he quit as company president of New Wien, the survivor of the 60-year-old Alaskan carrier.

Reduced to one low-cost flight a day between Anchorage, Seattle and Reno, Nev., the airline was grounded on Oct. 25 by order of the Federal Aviation Administration and filed another Chapter 11 bankruptcy petition on Oct. 28 in Seattle.

Sued by a group of Wien pilots who had been active in efforts to organize an employee takeover, Rude, 54, said he never intended to "put blood on the table" when he took over the operation.

"I've fought too many wars with them," he said. "All the rest of the battles I've done have been a lot more fun than this one."

Previously he founded or at one time presided over a firefighting airline, a fast-food franchise, a food-processing company, and a trucking firm.

He settled one bitter lawsuit over control of an Alaska freight-hauling airline but was socked with heavy fines by the Canadian government for tax evasion and violations of the Canadian Aeronautics Act.

"In a number of companies I've wound up the president," Rude said in a recent interview, "but I don't consider myself president material.

"I enjoy the building, the shaping and the running, but I don't see myself as the No. 1 man."

Richard Rude directed New Wien airline for six months

Even his fiercest critics as a corporate executive praise his skills as a pilot, however, and he has his supporters in the business world as well.

"If you are wheeling and dealing, you're going to step on somebody's toes once in a while," said Orville Tosch, who worked with Rude at Northern Consolidated Airline, a forerunner of Wien. "Bud never ever clipped anybody that didn't need clipping."

Soft-spoken but highly competitive, Rude has weathered storms in his private life as well.

The oldest of his three children, Kathy Rude, nearly died in a car wreck at a Minnesota racetrack in 1983.

Referring to his wife, Mae, Rude said, "It was almost as if she had to rebuild one of the children."

His daughter has returned to racecar driving, and son Noel races go-carts as a diversion from his work on a master's degree at a university in Arizona.

"You've got to do what you have to do," Rude says. "I try to caution them what the pitfalls are, and hopefully they make the right decisions."

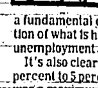
Rude was hired by Northern Consolidated founder Ray Peterson in 1946 as a mechanic's helper, became Wien's youngest pilot at age 23 and then formed his own charter airline.

Peterson, now 73, said that when both engines of the company's DC-3 died in mid-air on a flight to King Salmon, Alaska, Rude remained calm as he went through the checklist to discover what was wrong.

"He's a cool customer," Peterson said.

"My knees were shaking," the aviation pioneer admitted. "It sounded awful good when the engines started running again."

Nation's unemployment picture coming out upside down



Sylvia Porter

Have you now accepted today's level of unemployment — once considered startlingly high — as "normal," a natural economic fact in this world's environment?

Looks that way. The civilian unemployment rate is hovering around 7 percent, give or take — which works out to more than 8 million men and women. That unemployment rate is close to the level reached at the close of the Carter administration. Except for that period, 7 percent had been deemed much too high.

The whole picture is upside-down. In previous eras, unemployment at this mark would have aroused loud calls for public works programs or other forms of government intervention to ease the problem.

But today, there is almost none of that. We seem to have gone through a fundamental change in our perception of what is high and what is low unemployment in the United States.

It's also clear that the days when 4 percent to 5 percent unemployment was a maximum acceptable level are long gone as well.

"No one even argues for 4 percent unemployment any more," says Kenneth Goldstein, an economist at the Conference Board.

Unemployment has been edging upward since the 1970s. In 1969, unemployment dropped to its lowest level in that decade: 3.5 percent. It moved up to 4.9 percent in 1970 and, with the exception of 1973, when it again was 4.9 percent, has been rising ever since.

Meanwhile, economists speak of the natural rate of unemployment. Below that level, whatever it is, the rate of inflation starts to increase. The cost of hiring the last employees rises as the cost of training them increases; output costs more; the natural unemployment rate increases; the expenses are passed on. The inflationary spin begins.

There is always a tug-of-war between how much inflation and how much unemployment can co-exist, explains Cary Leahey, a vice president and senior economist at Shearson Lehman Bros. In a sense, a sustained high rate of unemployment has been the cost of doing business without a rising rate of inflation (now running about 4 percent a year).

"We've paid a high price in unemployment for a long time, but we've held inflation down," Goldstein says.

A range of 5.5 percent to 6.5 percent seems to be the natural unemployment rate, economists agree. This figure represents those who are currently out of work, but actively seeking new employment. The Bureau of Labor Statistics keeps another figure for "discouraged workers," those who have abandoned efforts to find another job.

The reason for the upward shift in the natural rate is a demographic one. The composition of the unemployment line has changed.

During the decade of the 1970s, the baby boomers marched, en masse, into the labor force — joining millions of women of all generations marching in the same direction. Of course this raised the level of unemployment, since many more potential employees were looking for jobs. And the unemployment rate for these groups is higher than for the traditional male worker.

Not only has there been a change in the long-term level of the unemployment rate, but changes also have occurred in how we view this upward shift and how we react to it.

It has clearly been a major force in our efforts to curb inflation. In a related consideration, wage increases have been lower than we have been accustomed to, creating a classical pattern: big wage increases distributed among fewer employees, or small, even no, increases with more people working.

The natural rate of unemployment has gone up. Policymakers and most of the public are reluctant to bring down the rate by encouraging a "warming up" of the inflation rate. This, I repeat, is a classical, though painful, conflict.

Now international factors come into play, as well — such as the massive trade deficit, the high cost of U.S. products in relation to others. And this is merely the beginning.

Our ability to assimilate the changes, both real and in perception, will take time. Taking a tiny fraction of a percentage from that 7.1 percent will be a struggle. And we're right in the middle of it.

Pocatello firm to open new factory

BLACKFOOT, Idaho (AP) — Western Fabricating, a Pocatello-based manufacturer of storage equipment, may soon employ 30 to 40 people at a new operation in Blackfoot, company President Richard Booth said.

The company also is moving ahead with its plans to construct a 44,000-square-foot plant on a 13-acre site near Chubbuck, Booth said.

"We should be into production at the Blackfoot location by mid-month," said Booth, former vice president and manager of Stearns Catalytic World Corp.'s PAFCO plant in Pocatello. "Our company has bid some jobs and we're looking for more."

Western Fabricating will produce pressure vessels and pipe fabricating equipment which will be used to store gas and oil, minerals and paper products, he said.

The move into Blackfoot came nearly three months after Booth received preliminary approval from the Bannock County Industrial Development Commission to sell $3 million in tax-free industrial revenue bonds.

Booth said once the bonds are sold, the money will be used to finance construction of the larger plant near Chubbuck.

"We'll keep the Blackfoot plant in operation to manufacture the smaller vessels," he said.

Certain postal rates rise on Jan. 1

WASHINGTON (AP) — Postage rates for non-profit organizations and newspapers delivered in the county where they are published will remain unchanged until Jan. 1, when they will be increased by 23 to 41 percent, the postmaster general said Tuesday.

The increase was to begin Oct. 1 but was delayed when Congress provided more money to subsidize the mailings.

A formal vote on implementing the higher rate will be taken after Congress acts on the subsidy as part of the budget package.

In his budget for this fiscal year, President Reagan proposed eliminating the subsidy. That would have forced charities and other non-profit mailers — including political parties — to pay the same rates that businesses pay for bulk mailings.

Postmaster General Paul N. Carlin told the Postal Board of Governors the subsidy "is certainly in jeopardy in future years."

The board approved a two-year trial of a rate reduction for packages which a mailer delivers to the bulk mail center closest to the final destination. The proposal must also be approved by the Postal Rate Commission.

There would be a 25-cent discount on packages of 1 pound through 15 pounds and a 40-cent saving on packages 16 through 35 pounds.

Revenue lost because of the discount would be made up through higher volume and avoiding the cost of long-distance shipping.

The experiment would begin at three to five bulk mail centers and spread to all 21 if it is successful.

Assistant Postmaster General Karen Uemoto said the proposal is part of a plan for the "revitalization of parcel post" which has had "an uninterrupted decline over the past three decades" dropping from 848 million pieces in 1955 to 146 million in the 12 months that ended Sept. 27.

She said the service would be targeted to businesses, such as large mail-order companies, which do most of their mailing to households as opposed to those which ship packages to businesses.

Revlon acquired

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — Pantry Pride Inc. has confirmed that it acquired control of Revlon Inc., but it remained quiet on its plans for the cosmetics and health-care concern.

Pantry Pride, which operates supermarkets and other retail stores, said in a terse statement that 27.6 million, or 88 percent, of Revlon's 31.5 million total common shares outstanding were tendered under Pantry Pride's $58-a-share offer that expired midnight Friday.

But the company made no mention of its plans for Revlon.

'Our State is a Dumpsite' song scores anti-nuclear protest

SPOKANE (AP) — Seattle songwriter-singer Dana Lyons blended a serious anti-nuclear protest message with a deft sense of humor when he penned the song "Our State is a Dumpsite."

Lyons objects to the federal government's proposed plans to bury half the nation's most lethally radioactive reactor wastes at the Hanford nuclear reservation by the turn of the century.

His humor comes in lyrics which poke fun at Washington state's apparent willingness to go along with it.

"Governors in Nevada and Texas, where other sites are proposed, have said they'll accept the waste only over their dead bodies," Lyons said last weekend in Spokane, where he attended the two-day "Human Health and Hanford" symposium.

"Although Gov. Booth Gardner says he wants more studies, the response to this issue from Washington has been mild, to say the least," Lyons said.

"Our state is a dumpsite, plutonium 239
Our state is a dumpsite, just set it over there, that's fine
The other states all love us 'cause we rarely take a stand
They send us little presents and put money in our hands."

The song is featured in a four-song album recorded in Seattle and released Aug. 1. It already has been adopted by the Washington Public Interest Research Group, WashPIRG, as the theme song for its anti-repository "Don't Sacrifice Washington" campaign.

"It's our hope that expressing our feelings about the danger of a dumpsite at Hanford through music will bring home the danger to the people of Washington," said Gerald Pollet, WashPIRG executive director.

The songwriter said response has been stronger in Spokane than in Seattle.

"With nuclear waste trucks scheduled to come through Spokane, it appears to be an issue that's taken far more seriously here," Lyons said.

Lyons used the money earned from a stint as a commercial fisherman in Alaska to form a Seattle record company, Reigning Records, with his brother Zack.

Lyons said he first became worried about safe disposal of toxic wastes when he worked on a housing rehabilitation program in Chester, Pa., that was two blocks from a chemical waste dump.

"When I moved here and heard about the nuclear waste issue, I got concerned," Lyons said. He said he hopes his humor, he said.

Lyons said his album isn't selling solely to the anti-Hanford crowd.

"Both sides seem to love it," he chuckle ... and then choose," Lyons said, noting that purchasers at the symposium included Hanford nuclear engineers and leaders of the environmental group Greenpeace.

"I didn't want to hit people over the head with the issue when I wrote this song. I just wanted people to

Osmond peddles ski season

HELENA, Mont. (AP) — Meeting Marie Osmond on the ski slopes of Montana may not be every schusser's dream come true, but state promotion officials are hoping the prospect will pay off big for Montana's winter tourism industry.

In cooperation with Capitol Records and Northwest Orient Airlines, a promotional sweepstakes featuring the song "Meet Me in Montana" — sung by Ms. Osmond and Dan Seals — is underway in 14 major American cities.

The country-western tune has been blaring away in sporting goods shops across the land, accompanied with a video of ski footage in Montana.

Customers at the shops can enter the sweepstakes and win a ski vacation to Montana, where they'll meet Ms. Osmond and Seals sometime in late November or early December. A news conference also will be held.

It's all part of Montana's promotional "Ski Montana Program," now in its fifth year.

"We definitely think this is working," state Travel Publicity Coordinator Julie Davies said of the program.

During the first year of the program in 1981, the state spent $4,000 promoting Montana ski resorts. This year, about $100,000 will be spent, with the private sector pitching in about the same amount, Ms. Davies said.

"We've come a long way since (1981)," she added.

According to U.S. Forest Service figures, there were 678,000 "ski days" in Montana in 1980. That amount increased to 800,000 in 1984, and Ms. Davies said much of that increase is due to out-of-staters skiing in Montana.

The state tourism office has produced another video on Montana skiing that will be distributed free to outlets for use in promoting tourism in the state, she said.

Ms. Davies said the effort also will use a direct-mailing campaing to reach 66,000 skiers in Washington, Idaho, Wyoming, Minnesota, Wisconsin and the the Dakotas.

The names were purchased from a Colorado firm that has computer banks filled with names gather from business mailings, which gather such information as consumer hobbies.

Filipinos turn to gold mining as nation's economy slumps

By MIGUEL C. SUAREZ
The Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines — Hit by the nation's economic slump, tens of thousands of Filipinos are burrowing into mountainsides in search of gold.

Some find it; others die in a quest for fortunes or simple supplements to meager incomes.

Officials say as many as 200,000 Filipinos are engaged in this crude, back-breaking and largely unregulated activity all over the country, more than half of them on the island of Mindanao. Recent landslides in Mindinao, blamed on the crude mining, buried possibly 300 people.

The government's Bureau of Mines says 3.7 metric tons, or about $40 million worth of gold, was sold to the Central Bank by small-scale miners in the first half of 1985.

No one knows for sure how many people remain buried under tons of mud and rocks in the mountains of Mindanao's Davao del Norte Province after the Oct. 21 and Oct. 27 landslides or how many people have died under similar circumstances in the past.

The mining weakens hillsides and strips away vegetation, leading to soil erosion. When it rains, landslides often are the result.

Bureau of Mines officials say they keep no statistics of such deaths because, in addition to often contradictory reports from the mining sites, the mostly amateur miners rarely report casualties for fear the government will stop their operations.

Since the twin disasters in Mindanao, the government has been accused in newspaper columns and editorials of negligence, inefficiency and ineptitude.

Horacio Ramos, chief of the Mining Bureau's mineral economics section, denied such charges in an interview, saying the bureau has posted engineers and geologists in major gold rush sites to help miners follow systematic and safe mining procedures.

"Our problem is one of control because of the big numbers involved," Ramos said, adding that 70,000 to 95,000 people are working on four sites in Davao. Others are scattered over Mindanao's Surigao province, on the central Philippine islands of Negros and Leyte, and in the Benguet and Bicol regions on the main island of Luzon.

Small-scale, amateur mining is not new in this mineral-rich country, but the big numbers of people joining the rush are a phenomenon that started about three years ago as the economy began to falter, forcing commercial mines and other businesses either to close or to lay off workers, said Ramos.

He and other officials said that despite the constant danger, the number of miners continues to swell as the country's economic problems force prices higher and people find it more difficult to live on regular earnings.

A day after President Ferdinand E. Marcos ordered all mining operations stopped in Davao to hasten rescue and recovery efforts, miners continued working in the pits, even though continuous rain made it dangerous.

"We have warned them to relocate, but some still insist on mining," said Col. Honesto Bumanglag in a telephone interview from the area. "May God be with them."

In a recent statement, the Bureau of Mines director, Juanito Fernandez, said closing the mine sites was "an unattractive option." It would not only deprive thousands of their livelihood but also plug a viable source of foreign exchange needed by the government, he said.

Provincial officials say gold rushes are usually triggered by rumors of gold being found in a particular place or a previously impoverished farmer returning to his village with a brand new refrigerator or a jeep after a few days or weeks of work at a gold rush site.

Word spreads rapidly and in no time hundreds of people, mostly peasants, landoff workers and fortune hunters, converge on a site.

Armed with picks, chisels and hammers, the miners bore into the mountainsides, scooping up earth and rocks believed to contain gold dust or nuggets.

They dig narrow tunnels and shafts that go 45 feet deep or more. Workers at the bottom are fed air through garden hoses attached to a manually operated gadget resembling a spinning wheel.

The complex network of interconnecting tunnels so weaken the area that it can cave in during a rainstorm.

On the heels of the miners come thousands of other people, including gold traders, people who rent out ore crushers, canteen and bar operators, and even prostitutes.

"There are all sorts of support services," said Ramos, "everything but funeral parlors."

Patients' rights get backing

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two consumer organizations called on the Reagan administration Monday to inform elderly Medicare patients of their legal rights against premature hospital discharge.

Representatives of the People's Medical Society and the American Association of Retired Persons told a news conference there should be at least as much concern for the rights of the elderly sick as for the rights of the common criminal.

They said belt-tightening by the administration, including Medicare payment caps based on types of illness, is pressuring hospitals to discharge Medicare patients more quickly — possibly too quickly for their health.

Patients do have legal rights to protect them against such "dumping," they said, but too often are unaware of their rights. They receive little or no help from hospitals or government in learning of them, said Charles Inlander, executive director of the People's Medical Society.

Inlander contrasted the situation with criminal law, where suspects must be read their Miranda rights against self-incrimination.

"If a criminal is Mirandized, why isn't an elderly patient advised of his rights — the right not to be thrown out of a hospital too early?" asked Inlander.

The two organizations called on the administration to require hospitals to give each Medicare patient a listing of his rights under Medicare.

Those rights include the right to a two-day written notice of intended discharge; a right to appeal a discharge if the patient believes he is being forced out early; and a right to immediate review of the appeal by the Medicare review organization having jurisdiction over the hospital, with a decision within three days.

"Older Americans do have rights under the . . . system," said C. Kermit Phelps, vice chairman of the AARP. "They can protect themselves from abuses. But they need to know how."

He said the AARP is offering booklets on patient rights to anyone requesting them.

"We challenge the Health Care Financing Administration (which runs Medicare) to send all Medicare beneficiaries a statement of their rights as well as requiring all hospitals to provide the same information when a patient is admitted," he said.

Inlander said his organization placed telephone calls to all 10 regional HCFA offices, posing as a patient seeking information on his rights. Nine of the 10 regional offices gave incorrect answers, he said, with only the Denver regional office offering proper advice.

He released copies of letters sent in mid-October to HCFA Acting Administrator C. McClain Haddow requesting that regulations be implemented requiring that patients be notified of their rights.

Coast Guard's drug patrols sent to dock by budget crunch

AP Laserphoto

Coast Guard patrol boat passes idle cutter as it prepares to tie up at a pier in Seattle

By TIM AHERN
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — As the Coast Guard suspended some routine anti-drug patrols because of budget cuts, Congress was preparing to give it more money for military operations and was ordering the Navy to join the fight against narcotics smuggling.

The conflicting actions last week dramatized both the dual role of the Coast Guard and the pressures on Congress to do something about illegal drugs at a time when rising federal deficits mean smaller budgets for many government agencies.

The Coast Guard has both a civilian and military role. During peacetime, it is under the Transportation Department and has a variety of missions, including drug interdiction, life-saving and routine law enforcement.

But in wartime, the Coast Guard would move to the Defense Department's jurisdiction and Pentagon planners routinely include Coast Guard vessels in Navy plans and war games.

When the Senate recently voted on the Transportation Department budget, it slashed Coast Guard operations by $230 million from the House-approved $2.5 billion budget.

That led Adm. James Gracey, commandant of the service, to order an end to a number of routine anti-drug patrols by smaller Coast Guard vessels around the nation.

Coast Guard officials said the situation would continue until Congress finally adopts a budget for the service. The differing versions of the Transportation Department budget now go to a House-Senate conference committee to work out a compromise and supporters of the service say they plan to try to reverse the Senate cuts.

Meanwhile, when the House passed its version of a bill appropriating money for this fiscal year for the Pentagon, it added $100 million in unsolicited money for Coast Guard operations.

"You put this in the Transportation bill and you are competing with Amtrak and mass transit," said Rep. Silvio Conte, R-Mass., but "nobody is going to argue about defense."

At the same time, the Senate Appropriations defense subcommittee was writing its version of a Pentagon budget and added $375 million for the service to spend for weapons that could be used during wartime.

That money would go to purchase four C-130 transport planes, an icebreaking tugboat, and 16 110-foot patrol boats.

In yet another action, the House last week finally approved a Senate-passed bill authorizing the Pentagon's budget for the current fiscal year, a measure which is separate from the appropriations bills that are part of the complicated congressional budget process.

That measure permits the Navy to help the Coast Guard in the anti-drug fights if the task doesn't hurt military readiness.

Under the proposal, which was opposed by Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, Navy vessels on patrol in the Caribbean Sea could take along a team of Coast Guardsmen.

Boats suspected of carrying contraband could be stopped by the Navy vessel and searched by Coast Guard personnel, who would be empowered to make arrests and sail the ship to the nearest port.

The Navy has still not worked out specifics of how the plan would work and a number of questions remain unanswered. For example, none of the congressional proponents of the plan for using the Navy in the anti-drug fight say what they think the Navy should do if the Coast Guardsmen are shot at while attempting to make an arrest.

Weinberger told Congress he opposed the plan for two reasons — because he thought it might take away from the Navy's main job of keeping the peace and because he thought it might erode the traditional barrier between civilian and military law enforcement roles.

Attendance figures send Texas principal to roof of school

GRANBURY, Texas (AP) — Sylvia Campbell, the principal at Granbury Elementary School, recently said she would spend a day on the school's roof if her pupils achieved a 97 percent attendance rate.

The students came through — and Ms. Campbell says she will, too.

"She's on the roof," school secretary Mary Stumm said after tallying up the attendance figures from Oct. 7 to Nov. 1. "They made 97 percent."

Ms. Campbell said she wasn't sure which day she'll spend on top of the school.

"It looks like Friday because that's the only day this week my calendar is open," she said. "I hope the weather is halfway decent."

The principal said she doesn't expect to be bored.

"I guess I'll take me a book and some paperwork to work on up there," she said. "There are some things I can do up there."

Long ride for Utahns nears end

HIAWATHA, Kan. (AP) — The two men look like a throwback to another time as they ride horseback across Kansas — two cowboys riding the dusty trail.

Only now the trail is made of asphalt and the riders, Don and Darwin Little, are heading east to Kansas City for the mid-November convention of Future Farmers of America.

"People have been fabulous," said Don, 50, of the 1,300-mile trip that started Sept. 25 at their Morgan, Utah, home, about 40 miles northeast of Salt Lake City.

Darwin, 19, will be awarded the FFA American Agribusiness Degree at the convention, which begins Nov. 14 and is expected to draw about 22,000 young people from around the nation.

The FFA convention is held in conjunction with the the American Royal Livestock, Horse Show and Rodeo, which is celebrating its 87th year in Kansas City.

Darwin got the idea for the journey from a book he read last winter about a man who spent seven years walking across America.

"Dad didn't really like that idea so he said he'd go with me," said Darwin. "But he didn't want to walk, either."

The two decided to ride horses to recreate the type of ride their Mormon forefathers might have made in traveling to Utah.

So the elder Little closed up his roofing business and father and son donned wrap-around leather chaps, denim jeans, worn work boots and well-used cowboy hats and loaded extra clothing, sleeping bags and a tent on two pack horses and set out to fulfill a dream.

When they don't pitch a tent under the stars, the Littles have stayed with FFA members along the way, and occasionally in a motel.

Don said the two eat cold meals because they were unable to carry the equipment to fix hot meals, and bathing has been done at either a host's house or simply at a pond "a few miles back" from the highway.

FFA members in the towns they have passed through have arranged for feed for the horses, he said.

So far the trip has taken them through a rainstorm, two snowstorms and a blizzard.

But the most memorable experience occurred in Denver where Darwin's horse tipped over — that's right, tipped over on his back — on a downtown city street.

"An elderly lady came out on her corner lot and leaned over to pet my horse," Darwin said. "The horse, with no warning at all, jumped up over the wall onto her lawn. The pack horse I was leading jumped up, but missed the wall and fell over on his back on the sidewalk."

The horse then fell over on top of him.

"My dad was laughing so hard he couldn't help me," said Darwin, who was not injured in the mishap.

The riders have been covering 30 to 35 miles a day as they travel on U.S. 36 across Kansas. They expect to arrive in Kansas City on Nov. 13.

"A lot of it is endurance now," said the younger Little. "What's making us finish is that exciting city on the other end.

"We plan to ride down the streets of Kansas City, taking up our own lane to the Radisson (Hotel Muehlebach)," he said. "We'll let the law know about our plans. They can either help us or sweep up after us."

Because of winter weather and hazardous traveling, the Littles plan to truck their horses and gear back home, Don said.

Knicks' salary-cap busting draws NBA's ire

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — An arbitrator's decision in the Albert King case puts the National Basketball Association right back where it was before the salary cap was imposed to curb the spending instincts of the wealthier clubs, in the opinion of New Jersey Nets Coach Dave Wohl.

"You can really make some big deals now," said Wohl. "The rich clubs can offer big bonuses and a $75,000 salary. It's going to be tough for some clubs to meet the price of a veteran free agent."

NBA Special Master Kingman Brewster, in a ruling announced Monday, held that the New York Knicks did not violate the salary cap provision by offering King, a member of the Nets, a $3 million contract, which included a $1 million signing bonus over three years.

The Nets have until Friday to match the offer, which they say they will do.

Meanwhile Brewster's decision drew other comments.

Denver Nuggets President Vince Boryla, a former Knicks player and coach, saw his old team as a villain.

"It's just typical of the Knicks trying to circumvent something," Boryla said. "We just try to kind of mind our own shop here, but they (the Knicks) spend money like it's water."

The Nets, which King has played for since entering the league in 1981, have no intention of letting the Knicks getting away with the offer.

"We're going to match it," said Nets President Bernie Mann. "I'm very disappointed in the ruling. I really think it does havoc to the (salary) cap."

King could still wind up in New York. The Nets could sign him and then trade him to the Knicks for a first round pick, which New York coach Hubie Brown says he'd be willing to do.

But Mann says the Nets will want at least a player and a No. 1 pick.

The league refused to comment on the ramifications of Brewster's ruling or if any other moves are planned.

"At this moment I don't know of anything that is planned," said Alex Sachare, the league's director of information. "I can't say what we are doing or what we're not doing."

The cap was an agreement worked out by the NBA and the players association last spring during negotiations. Commissioner David Stern fought for the cap as a means to keep the weaker franchises afloat.

But the Knicks who also this year signed first-round draft choice Patrick Ewing to a multi-million dollar contract, have been chastised around the league for giving center Bill Cartwright a $7 million, six-year deal, five years guaranteed.

Knicks officials did not return several phone calls Tuesday.

Chicago Bulls vice president of basketball operations Jerry Krause and Dallas Mavericks general manager Norm Sonju say they really don't what affect the decision has.

"I don't know how they did it, so I really don't know," said Sonju. "I know when we were trying to sign players, there were just things we couldn't do."

But Boryla said no matter, all clubs will eventually be hurt.

"They (the Knicks) don't look at financial responsibility the way the rest of us do," Boryla said. "And the rest of us are going to end up paying for it anyway."

Resort prepares race bid

By BARBARA NEIWERT
Times-News correspondent

SUN VALLEY — Sun Valley Co. is in the process of compiling a bid package for a World Cup ski race on Bald Mountain in December of 1986.

Carl Wilgus, publicity director for Sun Valley Co., said Sun Valley has "expressed interest" in hosting a December World Cup race and is in the initial phase of submitting a bid to the International Ski Federation.

Sun Valley has not hosted a World Cup race since 1977. Under the ownership of Earl Holding there has been little interest in hosting a race of this caliber.

Wilgus explained World Cup races have historically been held in the spring months in the United States, after starting the winter schedule in Europe. However, due to insufficient snow depths on the European continent, and abilities of American ski resorts to "make" snow, the FIS chose to begin the 1986-87 World Cup racing tour at an American resort.

Wilgus said that when the circuit held races in the United States in the spring, Sun Valley was so busy with existing business at that time of the year, the company was "not necessarily geared" toward providing the time and attention needed to host a quality event of this nature.

However, since the FIS will now start its racing season in America, Wilgus sees this as an opportunity for Sun Valley.

"It would be a great finale to our 50th anniversary celebration," he said, adding the World Cup race will also provide a certain amount of media publicity for Sun Valley, which would be good to have at the beginning of a ski season.

1986 marks the 50th anniversary of the Sun Valley resort and the ski season is highlighted with several special events.

One plus Sun Valley may have in being selected to host the international event is that Bald Mountain will be the scene of the 1985-86 Nor-Am racing finals, to be held the first week of April 1986.

The Nor-Am series is just one step down from the World Cup, Wilgus said, and will feature top racers from Canada and the United States. "It would be a great dress rehearsal for the World Cup," Wilgus said.

Resorts such as Park City, Utah; Heavenly Valley, Calif.; Lake Placid, N.Y.; Waterville Valley, N.H.; Aspen and Vail, Colo., may also be in contention for selection by the FIS, Wilgus said. A decision should be announced sometime this spring, he added.

Aspen, Vail, Waterville Valley and Heavenly Valley have all hosted successful World Cup races within the past two years, but Sun Valley has not hosted any world-class amateur or professional races since the 1970s.

Gooding topples Indians

Buhl — Gooding spoiled the Buhl Indians' home opener Tuesday with a 54-47 non-conference win.

Joyce Jacobsen led the Senator attack with 21 points while Carrie Bradshaw notched 16 and Lisa Graves, with a pair of three-pointers, added 12. Heidi Brenden scored 15 for the Indians before fouling out midway through the final period.

"Both teams played well for a season opener," said Buhl Coach Janet Smutny. "Jacobsen played an excellent game and Lisa Graves' two long field goals hurt — but everytime we got close to them we missed free throws. We have some work to do in that area."

Buhl's jayvees eked out a 39-38 double-overtime win in the preliminary. Sophomore guard Amy Butler converted both ends of a one-and-one with :06 remaining in the second extra session to put the Indians on top.

Buhl hosts the Filer Wildcats Friday evening while the Senators are idle. Both teams will participate in the Magic Valley Invitational tournament Nov. 11-14 at Jerome High School.

ISU's Harris lost to knee surgery on eve of Reno battle

POCATELLO — Idaho State University quarterback Vern Harris will undergo surgery within the next few days for ligament damage in his left knee and will be lost for the season.

ISU Sports Information Director Glenn Alford said Tuesday Harris was examined in Los Angeles Monday and scheduled for surgery later in the week.

Harris, a senior, was injured while trying to escape being tackled in last Saturday's 29-15 loss to Boise State.

Harris' backup, sophomore Gino Mariani, was also injured in the Boise State game, and, like Harris, may not be able to play quarterback again this season. Mariani suffered stretched ligaments in the shoulder of his throwing arm while being tackled and, as of Tuesday, could not raise his arm over his head. Mariani should be able to punt Saturday against Nevada-Reno, however, Alford said.

Idaho State's third-string quarterback, senior Roggy Pflug, suffered a slight shoulder separation in the Boise State game but will start Saturday.

Sophomore Marty Hoge, who has never taken a varsity snap from center at Idaho State, will be his backup.

Earlier this season, Harris surpassed Mike Machurek's career passing and total offense records at Idaho State. He also holds the Big Sky Conference record for single-game passing yardage.

The Bengals' also lost reserve guard Mike Schwartz for the season to a knee injury. His brother, reserve defensive tackle Mike Schwartz, has a pinched nerve in his shoulder and won't play Saturday.

Spinks vacates light-heavy crowns

NEW YORK (AP) — Michael Spinks, the newly-minted International Boxing Federation heavyweight champion, relinquished his light heavyweight title belts Tuesday and his promoter said a first defense would be announced within two weeks.

Ex-champ Larry Holmes and Gerry Cooney were among the possible opponents.

Representatives of the World Boxing Council, World Boxing Association and IBF reclaimed the light heavyweight hardware, figuratively if not literally. Promoter Butch Lewis said Spinks will keep the actual belts that identified him as the undisputed light heavyweight king.

The decision to continue in the much more lucrative heavyweight division surprised no one.

"Michael's immediate plans are to defend the heavyweight title in February," Lewis said. "Negotiations have started with Holmes, Cooney and all the other guys in the top ten who call every five minutes."

Spinks won the IBF title last Sept. 21 in Las Vegas, Nev., outpointing Holmes over 15 rounds. After the fight, his first loss in 49 bouts, Holmes announced his retirement. But the ex-champ is apparently considering a rematch with Spinks, although the negotiations have not gone smoothly according to Lewis.

"Larry still has the syndrome of being champion for seven years," he said. "It's only been six weeks since he lost it. I appreciate that. He's negotiating from emotion. Larry is still of the opinion that he's the champion. It's as if he's the champion and Michael is the challenger. It will make our negotiations go smoother when it hits him (that Spinks holds the title)."

As for Cooney, Lewis said talks were stalled.

"With Cooney, it's his management. There are two ways to negotiate. Either you negotiate for a payday or you negotiate because you feel your fighter can win the title. Cooney's manager is wavering outside of both of those. There's a long way to go when you're talking about a Cooney fight."

From Spinks' standpoint, whatever Lewis decides will be fine.

"I don't have a preference," he said. "It doesn't matterr to me. I never get involved in picking opponents. I feel I have the talent, ability and knowhow to defeat anybody I go up against.

"I asked Butch once, if he needed help picking opponents. We decided. He does that and I do this (fighting)."

Lewis added Carl "The Truth" Williams, Frank Bruno, and Marvis Frazier to the list of candidates for a defense. "I want Joe," Spinks deadpanned, referring to Frazier's father, the retired ex-champ, who attended the press conference.

Also on hand was WBC heavyweight champion Pinklon Thomas, who has a defense scheduled against Trevor Berbick in February. Thomas said he hoped to fight WBA champion Tony Tubbs and he and Spinks both expressed interest in an eventual unification fight.

"No light heavyweight champion ever retired his belts undefeated," Lewis said. "Michael unified the title and he plans to do that in the heavyweight division very soon so that there's only one guy on the block."

"I don't know what to say," he said. "I'm so proud. I'm shaking out of my boots and there's no fighting going on.

How hard it is to give $25,000 to an all-neighborhood star

Larry Hovey

And now it evolves into "can you top this?" this current rage of telling the world that zealous alumni or fear-ridden coaches had unsuccessfully pressed money on the simon pure college players of the land.

A dwindling number of you should remember the old radio show of that name in which a topic anecdote was recited and the four panelists then had to "top" the laugh the write-in contestant's joke had elicited.

In NBA dressing rooms — and rooms of frustrated would-be NBA players — the theme builds.

"I was offered $50,000" says the first one and the second says: "$60,000" and the first comes back to mention "and another school offered me $70,000."

Those feeling compelled to come forward admit that after a handshake with a fan a $50 or $100 bill materialized. So far no one has admitted to taking those $50,000 offers.

"I didn't go to the school that made the offer because I wouldn't compromise my values or sell myself."

Admirable, admirable.

One who made such a lofty statement of self-absolution last week did so after ending a month and one-half holdout because the contract he felt was good two years ago, was too cheap today.

So, obviously, we all can understand that a man who feels $600,000 isn't enough for 74 basketball games and with money in the bank would spurn a legal document he voluntarily signed — and yet, as a pauper from the poorest section of town, he turned down fifty thousand hidden, tax-free dollars to do-or-die at NCAA maximum for dear old Embraceable U.

Now, it doesn't surprise here that outstanding athletes are offered excessive enducements to attend a school. Our rule of thumb is this: the bigger the national power, the more excessive those are likely to be. But we must hasten to add there are major and consistently athletically powerful schools that we've never heard sullied.

Another rule of thumb is if a Notre Dame, or an Oklahoma, or a UCLA or a USC or a Texas, etc., is recruiting a lad, all of the above probably will talk to him a time or two along the way, too.

It makes sense for a football players from a cold climate to covet a position on a team in warmer climes or domed stadiums. It doesn't make sense for a warm-climate player to show up on the athletic fields of a northern powerhouse simply from the standpoint of personal convenience and/or reputation because an offer from one is tantamount to an offer from many.

Those capable of commanding under-the-table largesse can pick and choose climate, geographical area, etc.

There are, of course, honest athletes and individuals who make unexpected final decisions for personal reasons or whim.

There are reasons, too, that no one has said "yep, I took the $50,000, played two years and then filed for hardship when the money ran out and they wouldn't come up with any more."

Sometimes that is because the payoffs are funnelled through and to other members of the family and probably no one likes to think about putting an "exploiter" tag on his family.

Also, there still probably are some who feel a loyalty to their alma mater — at least the athletic program that sustained them after high school. Those seem to be vanishing types, however.

There is decidedly less of this going on than is imagined. Second echelon schools on down are less susceptible. But at the same time, there isn't an athletic program extant in which a coach or athletic department does not do everything it can for its athletes from shielding them to tutoring them and protecting and closeting them in cases of mis-adventures.

We've had a couple of cases in this state this year in which more than laws concerning training were broken and we'll have them again next year or the year after.

But for now, all these guys running around talking about accepting $50 tips and rejecting $25,000 offers wears too thin for these callused ears.

Somewhere, sometime, someone took the $25,000.

Highland, Shelley hold narrow leads in state prep grid poll

By The Associated Press

The first weekend of Idaho high school football playoff action settled the dust in three of the state's five divisions, but the question of who's No. 1 remains an open one among the big schools.

Highland and Shelley were the narrow favorites in Classes A-1 and A-2 in the final Associated Press prep poll of the season, while Homedale, Oakley and Council were the unanimous picks for the No. 1 spots in the other three divisions.

The Rams, who shut out second-ranked Meridian 45-0 two weeks ago, took the top slot in A-1 by a margin of just three points. Highland, 8-2, will visit Meridian, 9-1, for an A-1 Division I playoff game this weekend.

Capital, 7-2, nailed down third place, followed by Borah, 6-3, and Coeur d'Alene, 5-5. Borah will travel to Coeur d'Alene this weekend for another A-1 Division I semifinal contest.

In A-2, Shelley, 9-1, edged Bishop Kelly, 8-1, by just two points for the No. 1 spot. The Russets, ranked fourth last week, advanced into the A-2 semifinals by defeating Marsh Valley. Bishop Kelly was eliminated from the playoffs two weeks ago by losing to Vallivue, now 7-3 and ranked fifth in the survey.

St. Maries, 9-1, which lost its only game of the season in the first round of the playoffs last week to Moscow, is third in the final A-2 rankings. The Bears, 7-3, are rated No. 4.

Homedale, a 48-14 winner over Sugar-Salem in the first round of the A-3 playoffs last weekend, got all the first-place votes this week. North Fremont High of Ashton, which until last weekend was the only other unbeaten A-3 team in the state, fell out of the rankings following a 28-20 playoff loss to West Side High School of Dayton.

Defending state A-3 champ Gooding, 9-1, is ranked second this week, while McCall-Donnelly, 8-1, is third. Grangeville and West Side, both 8-2, are tied for fourth place.

In Class A-4, Oakley was the unanimous No. 1 selection following a 42-14 victory over Wilder in the first round of the playoffs. Defending state A-4 champ Mullan, which was eliminated from the playoffs last weekend by Kendrick, is ranked second with a 7-2 mark, while Kendrick, 5-5, is third. Shoshone, 8-1, is the No. 4 team, following by Genesee, 7-1.

Oakley and Kendrick will play for the state A-4 title next week.

Defending state eight-man champ Council, 8-0, received all the first-place votes this week after blanking fourth-ranked Richfield 32-0 in a first-round playoff game. North Gem, 9-0, was the No. 2 pick, followed by Salmon River, 6-3. Garden Valley, 6-3, is ranked fifth.

Council and North Gem will settle the state championship next weekend.

Here's how the state's sportswriters and broadcasters ranked the top high school football teams in each division: (First-place votes in parentheses)

A-1

Each squad hit eight after intermission and it stayed even until the Hornet's Julie Payne was fouled with one second remaining in the game with Raft River leading 35-33. Payne sank the front end but the final attempt bounced away.

The Trojan's Tonya Hitt and Declo's Geni Peterson tied for game scoring honors with 11.

Nuggets trim Hawks for fifth win in row

DENVER (AP) — National Basketball Association scoring-leader Alex English tallied 33 points and the Denver Nuggets withstood the loss of Calvin Natt to register their fifth straight victory Tuesday night, a 128-113 decision over Atlanta.

The start is the best for Denver since 1976 when the Nuggets won their first eight games of the season.

Natt, a Western Conference all-star forward last season, suffered a sprained left ankle late in the second quarter and did not return. His status for the Nuggets' next game, at home with Dallas on Thursday, was uncertain.

The Denver offense sputtered without Natt in the second half, but five teammates joined English in double figures and the Nuggets never let the visitors draw closer than eight points in the last quarter.

A Nugget rally led by reserve guard Mike Evans, who had four three-point baskets and 18 points in the game, helped Denver run off 15 straight points and break away from a 34-34 deadlock and assume control of the game.

Utah 118, Warriors 99

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Adrian Dantley led Utah with 27 points, but it was the Jazz bench that sparkled in the 118-99 victory over the Golden State Warriors.

NBA

Led by Thurl Bailey's 13 points, the Utah reserves outscored the Warriors bench 53-28.

Bailey hit 11 of his total during a six-minute stretch in the second period as the Jazz came back from an early 24-21 deficit after a quarter of play.

Utah built its lead to 51-44 at the half, and led 77-66 after three quarters of play.

Bucks 126, Spurs 97

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Ricky Pierce scored 26 points and Craig Hodges added 16 as the Milwaukee Bucks rolled over the San Antonio Spurs 126-97 Tuesday night for their third straight victory.

Milwaukee took control of the game at the beginning of the second quarter as they outscored the Spurs 18-7 to grab a 56-41 lead with 4:27 remaining as Pierce made one of two free throws.

The Bucks upped their lead to 68-49 at halftime when Jeff Lamp hit a jumper with 32 seconds remaining in the half.

At the start of the second half, the Bucks pushed the lead to 75-54 when Sidney Moncrief hit a jumper with 9:41 remaining in the third quarter.

Rockets 127, Blazers 113

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston's Akeem Olajuwon scored 27 of his game-high 41 points in the first half and guard John Lucas had a torrid fourth quarter as the Rockets defeated the Portland Trail Blazers 127-113.

Olajuwon provided most of the scoring punch in the first half for the slow-starting Rockets and Lucas hit 15 of his 22 points in the second half.

They led six Rockets who scored in double figures.

After struggling to a one-point 57-56 halftime lead, the 4-2 Rockets took advantage of Portland's slow start in the third quarter and jumped to an 86-73 advantage with three minutes to go in the period.

Portland, also 4-2, hit only three of its first 11 shots in the third quarter as the Blazers were outscored 18-7.

Nevertheless, Kiki Vandeweghe kept Portland within reach by scoring 14 points, and the score going into the final frame was 91-82. Vandeweghe finished with 28 to lead Blazer scorers. Sam Bowie added 15.

Nets 112, Bullets 106

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Buck Williams scored 13 of his game-high 25 points in the fourth quarter as the New Jersey Nets rallied in the second half for a 112-106 victory over the Washington Bullets.

The Nets, who trailed by as many as 14 points late in the second period and by 10 at the half, outscored Washington 10-2 at the close of the third period to take a one-point lead. Kelvin Ransey, who had four points in the streak, put the Nets ahead for good at 77-76, their first lead since early in the first period, on a jumper with 14 seconds remaining.

New Jersey, 4-3 with all four victories at home, then held the Bullets without a field goal for the first 3:34 of the fourth period. The Nets outscored Washington 11-2 during that stretch to open an 88-78 margin.

Conference-suspended Florida voted first in AP grid poll

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Unbeaten but once-tied Florida, barred from winning the title in its own conference, is the new front-runner in the race for the national championship.

The Gators achieved the No. 1 ranking in The Associated Press poll in results announced Tuesday, the first time they have held that position.

Should Florida survive some tough games ahead and still be No. 1 in the final poll, it will win the national title. However, no matter what it does in those remaining games, the Gators cannot win the Southeastern Conference title or appear in a bowl game because it is serving an NCAA probation out for past recruiting violations.

Florida, which has won six in a row since Rutgers rallied from a 21-point second-half deficit to tie the Gators 28-28 on Sept. 14, is the fourth team to occupy the top spot this season.

It received 42 of 59 first-place votes and 1,159 of a possible 1,180 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and sportscasters.

Coach Galen Hall's squad ran its record to 7-0-1 with a 14-10 victory over Auburn last weekend, and moved up from second with the help of Ohio State's 22-13 triumph over Iowa. The Hawkeyes had been No. 1 for five consecutive weeks and were a unanimous choice the last two.

"We're excited but also realize we have some tough games left," Hall said. "Our goal has been to win every week to give ourselves a chance to be there at the end."

Gators won't celebrate until year's over

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP) — The No. 1 ranking the University of Florida awaited for 50 years arrived Tuesday, but the campus consensus was that any wild celebration would be premature.

A hand-written signed taped up outside the Florida locker room summarized: "It's easy to become No. 1. The hard part is staying there. Concern ourselves only with Georgia."

Coach Galen Hall, who has compiled a record of 15-0-1 since becoming head coach early last season, said he was "pleased and excited, but our thoughts are on our next opponent, the University of Georgia.

"Our goal at the first of the season was to be the best team in the conference and highly rated. We wanted to be in the shooting for the national championship in November and we are," Hall said at his weekly press luncheon.

Asked if Florida should be No. 1 if it goes undefeated, Hall replied: "I can't control that."

Florida, now 7-0-1, faces Georgia Saturday in the Gator Bowl in Jacksonville and then hosts Kentucky and Florida State to finish the year.

Players echoed Hall's comments in the aftermath of The Associated Press rankings that put the Gators, barred from bowl competition this year, in first for the first time in the poll's 50-year history. Florida got 42 of 59 first-place votes.

"It (being No. 1) will give our team the incentive to play 100 percent," said Patrick Hunter, a linebacker.

Running back John L. Williams said the rating also would make Georgia play harder.

"Any time you have the chance to play the No. 1 team in the country, there is an incentive to knock them off," Williams said.

"Everybody is going to be gunning for us," said Leon Pennington, an inside linebacker.

"Now I know how the gunslingers of the old West felt," added Al Alsobrook, vice president for university and government relations. "Being No. 1 makes you very vulnerable."

Jack Thompson, a former Gator defensive coach who is marketing vice president for Athletic Attic in Gainesville, said he was excited, but added that more important would be "the No. 1 rating after the season. We still have Georgia to play."

Some students weren't as reserved.

"I think we deserve it. It's about time," said student Donna Meyer, 22, of Brooksville.

Penn State, Hall's alma mater and at 9-0 one of three unbeaten-untied major-college teams, climbed from third place to second with 15 first-place votes and 1,113 points.

"I haven't given it any thought and I'm not going to give it any thought," Penn State Coach Joe Paterno said of the rankings. "I don't think weekly polls are worth a nickel, and I've said that consistently.

"I've said at the end of the year polls have a place. But I think a weekly poll does nothing but sell newspapers and generate some fan interest. I don't think it does a thing for a football team."

"I don't think being ranked high helps anybody," Paterno added. "I think all it does is make people more anxious to beat you. All I know is every time you win one game, the next one gets tougher."

Nebraska, winner of seven straight since a season-opening loss to Florida State, jumped from fifth to third.

The NCAA rates Florida's schedule as the toughest in the country, and remaining No. 1 won't be easy with Georgia, Kentucky and Florida State ahead.

"We're very happy the voters looked at who we've played and what we've accomplished and put us where we are," Hall said. "We've got a long way to go, and a tough game against Georgia Saturday.

The Gators, who won their first ever SEC title last November only to be stripped of the crown because of NCAA sanctions, are bidding to become the third team to win the national title while on probation.

The others were Auburn in 1957 and Oklahoma in 1974. Hall was an assistant at Oklahoma when the Sooners did it. He replaced Charley Pell three games into the 1984 season and is 15-0-1 while extending the nation's longest unbeaten streak to 18 games (16-0-2).

"I think the goal to be the best team in the conference is what motivated us (Oklahoma), and that is what this (Florida) football team wants to be," Hall said.

"We feel like if you're the best team in a tough conference that you're going to be up there with a chance to finish No. 1," Hall added. "If we win our last three games, hopefully people will see us as a very good team."

Florida, which is also banned from live television and was stripped of scholarships because of rules violations that occurred during Pell's tenure, finished with a 9-1-1 record and No. 3 ranking in the final AP poll a year ago.

The NCAA's two-year investigation of Florida was one of the most highly publicized in history. The team, however, has refused to let the controversy, and lingering effects, affect its play on the field.

"Of course, you rather not have talk of probation thrown in your face every time you turn around," Hall said. "But our players have accepted it. They're working hard to become the best football team they can be and haven't let it become a distraction."

Ohio State, which received one first-place vote, vaulted from eighth to No. 4, while the Air Force jumped two spots to fifth — the Falcons' highest ranking ever followed by Iowa.

The other first-place vote went to No. 7 Oklahoma. Miami, Fla., Michigan and Oklahoma State complete the top ten.

The second 10 consists of Baylor, Arkansas, Auburn, UCLA, LSU, Florida State, Georgia, Brigham Young, Tennessee and Alabama.

USFL won't help Breaks pay bills

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — The Portland Breakers' overdue paychecks and bills won't be paid by owners of other United States Football League teams, the league's commissioner says.

Commissioner Harry Usher said Breakers owner Joe Canizaro must work out some kind of agreement with his former players.

"We are exerting a lot of pressure on Joe to try to figure a way out of his financial problems," Usher told The Oregonian newspaper in an interview published Tuesday. "But there's only so much we can do.

The Breakers, now an inactive USFL franchise, owe the players more than $1.2 million for the final four games of the 1985 season. Canizaro, a New Orleans real estate developer, has said the club doesn't have the money to honor the players' contracts.

The league's players association is considering further legal action in light of last week's transfer of the Denver Gold franchise to Portland for the 1986 season. The players' group filed a lawsuit Sept. 24 in Portland, seeking payment to at least 48 former Breaker players.

The Breakers and the USFL were named as defendants in the federal court lawsuit.

Joe Restic, the Breakers' player representative, said, "The league wanted its name removed from the lawsuit. It can't afford the bad publicity. We said, 'yes,' provided the league does not move another team into Portland until the players are paid. We took the league's name off the suit, but we can put them back on.

"The way I see it, the league has set a precedent," Restic said. "They paid for the Los Angeles Express all last year. They helped out the Houston Gamblers. And, as a part of our collective bargaining agreement, they paid six players from the inactive Chicago franchise who had guaranteed contracts."

Denver Gold officials have said they are unwilling to assume any of the Breakers' debts even if their club must do so to move to Portland.

Eleven horses named to International field

LAUREL, Md. (AP) — A field of 11 horses from seven nations, headed by Australia's Strawberry Road II, was named Tuesday for the $400,000 Washington, D.C., International at Laurel Race Course.

The 34th running of the 1½-mile turf race, with its purse increased by $150,000 over last year, will be held on Nov. 16.

"We feel we have the most sterling, competitive international fields put together this year," Frank DeFrancis, the new president of Laurel, said at a news conference.

The field, which may be expanded by one more entry, includes the winners of eight Group I races in either the United States or in Europe.

Great Britain leads the way with three entries. France and the United States will be represented by two horses each, with one apiece coming from Australia, Germany, Ireland and Italy.

Strawberry Road II, a 6-year-old horse, was third in the 1984 International won by Seattle Song.

Last Saturday, in the Breeders' Cup Turf, he lost by a neck as the 4-year-old filly Pebbles broke the Aqueduct track record by 1 1-5 seconds while winning the 1½-mile test in 2:27.

Mourjane, a 5-year-old horse from Ireland who was third in the Breeders' Cup Turf, also is coming to Laurel but DeFrancis was unable to secure Pebbles after her notable triumph.

"She got clotted fairly well in the eye, it was an exceptionally hard race for her, and they anticipate racing her again next year," DeFrancis said, while listing the reasons given him by the filly's connections for skipping the International.

Competing for the United States, which has not won the International since 1981, will be Sally Bailie's 5-year-old gelding Win and Elizabeth Moran's Creme Fraiche.

Win captured the Man o' War and Shergar stakes in his last two starts, and earlier won the Bernard Baruch Handicap. Creme Fraiche, trained by Woody Stephens, won the Belmont Stakes, the American Derby, the Jerome Handicap, and the Super Derby.

Great Britain, which scored the first of its two International victories in the 1952 inaugural, will be represented by Irish Oaks winner Helen Street, a 3-year-old filly; the 4-year-old colt Yashgan, winner of the Oak Tree Invitational at Santa Anita, and Jupiter Island, a 6-year-old horse.

France, which has won 13 International races including the last three, will be represented by two 3-year-old fillies, Triptych and Galla Placidia. Triptych's Group I victories include the Irish 2,000 Guineas and the Prix Marcel Boussac.

The remainder of the field includes Abary of Germany, a 5-year-old horse who has twice won the Grosser Preis von Berlin, and Jades, a 3-year-old colt from Italy.

Under the race's new weight-for-age conditions, 4-year-olds and up will be assigned 126 pounds and 3-year-olds will carry 122, with fillies and mares getting three-pound allowances.

Pro wrestler dies

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — Police are investigating the death of Rick "Quickdraw" McGraw, a professional wrestler whose body was found in his home by friends.

McGraw, 30, was know to wrestling fans nationally as one of the "good guys" on the World Wrestling Federation roster.

Police said friends who tried to reach him Friday night broke a window to get into his home and found McGraw's body in his bedroom.

A spokeswoman for the chief state medical examiner's office said preliminary autopsy results show no sign of foul play or heart disease.

Lasorda wows Washington press corps

Tom Lasorda waxed funny at White House

Yurchenko?

Yuch, I know him. He was a left-hander — Played with the Padres. Owchinko.

Star Wars?

"I got a couple guys who are going to join that outfit."

Achille Lauro?

"I followed that closely because it was an Italian ship."

Lasorda, the manager of the Los Angeles Dodgers, came calling on President Reagan on Tuesday and substituted at home plate briefly for deputy press secretary Larry Speakes.

What advice does he have for the president at the summit meeting later this month? How should he handle Mikhail Gorbachev?

"I think he should go over there and just play hardball.

Be friendly? Whip him?

"I think he should make every effort to be as friendly as possible but let him know we are the greatest country in the world. That would be a good, high, hard one."

Lasorda met briefly in the Oval Office with Reagan, gave him a blue Dodgers' tie and told the president that he looked good.

"I feel good, when can I pitch?" Reagan is said to have replied. Reporters were not invited in.

But they had a good crack at him in the briefing room. He didn't really mistake Vitaly Yurchenko, the Soviet KGB defector, for Bob Owchinko, who used to be a relief pitcher for the Padres, but, hey, a funny line is a funny line.

He also was asked whether he should have pitched to Jack Clark in the sixth game of the National League playoffs against St. Louis. The Dodgers were leading 5-4 with two outs in the top of the ninth in Los Angeles and there were Cardinal runners on second and third.

Lasorda had the choice of walking Clark to load the bases and pitch to the next batter, Andy Van Slyke, or pitching to Clark. Lasorda decided on the latter and Clark hit a three-run homer and the Dodgers lost the series.

Well, should he have pitched to Clark?

"After he hit the home run, my wife knows I should have walked him and she don't know anything about baseball," Lasorda said.

Among other opinions: Pete Rose, not Whitey Herzog, should have been National League Manager of the Year; bet the family jewels on the Dodgers next year; ABC's Sam Donaldson is an outstanding man in his field; and generous too, since he wants to donate $25,000 each year to the family of the Unknown Soldier.

Women can do anything men can do and if he had a third baseman — basewoman? — who could hit 30 home runs, he would sign her right now.

And Lasorda confided, his wife told him recently that after 35 years of marriage she feels he loves the Dodgers and baseball more than he loves her.

"I said, 'yeah,'" said Lasorda. "But I love you more than football and basketball."

Giants' Gray ends hold out

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — The New York Giants on Tuesday signed holdout wide receiver Earnest Gray to a contract reportedly worth between $200,000 and $225,000 in each of its two years, the club announced.

Gray, a seven-year National Football League veteran and second-round Giants draft choice out of Memphis State, agreed to terms of the contract last week and signed after passing a physical exam Tuesday, said team spokesman Ed Croke.

"That brings into the fold the last of the holdouts from this year," he said. Veteran All-Pro defensive back Mark Haynes signed with the Giants three weeks ago, ending his contract holdout.

Ewing pace worth millions

NEW YORK (AP) — Rookie center Patrick Ewing's 10-year National Basketball Association contract with the New York Knicks is worth $31.2 million with the first six years guaranteed, according to a story by Peter Vecsey in Tuesday's New York Post.

The newspaper says his salary ranges from $750,000 for 1985 to $3.75 million in 1994, the final year of the contract, that $3 million of the total package is deferred, payable in 1995, and that the contract includes a $4.2 million interest-free loan.

Vecsey, who identifies the Knicks' front office as his source, says of the contract: "The first six years are fully guaranteed and fully protected, irrespective of skill, basketball injuries, basketball-related injuries (any body-building or firming-up exercises), mental breakdown, personal (this provision isn't defined) and death."

Jones forced to retire

LONDON (AP) — British welterweight boxer Colin Jones, whose three attempts to win the world title ended in failure, was advised by his manager Tuesday to retire after he collapsed at home with a back injury.

Jones' manager Eddie Thomas said the fighter was hospitalized after suffering a spinal injury Monday at his home in Gorseinon, South Wales.

Porter undergoes surgery

PULLMAN, Wash. (AP) — Kerry Porter, the Pacific-10 Conference's leading rusher in 1983, underwent successful surgery on Monday to repair a shoulder separation and fractured shoulder blade.

Porter, a junior running back, was injured in Washington State's loss to Arizona State on Oct. 26.

Porter will be sidelined for this season's remaining games against Montana State on Nov. 16 and Washington on Nov. 23, WSU Sports Information Director Rod Commons said today. Porter is expected to completely recover for the 1986 season, Commons added.

Has success softened Bears' Ditka?

CHICAGO (AP) — Has success forged a new image for Mike Ditka?

It was a question put to the man now in his fourth and most successful year as Chicago Bears coach.

Ditka bit his lip, allowed himself a quick smile and replied:

"I'm glad it wasn't (the old) Mike out there Sunday, when the Bears defeated the Green Bay Packers 16-10 in a mistake-filled, brawl-beset contest). That Mike would have been awfully excited for a while."

The questioner persisted. Was there a new or different Mike off the field?

"I don't drive the highways as much," said Ditka, referring to a much-publicized arrest in Chicago for driving under the influence of alcohol following a victory over San Francisco last month. "That's for sure."

Secure because he already has been awarded a second three-year contract, buoyed by success and hailed recently as something of an innovator, Ditka can afford to lampoon his new image. He can afford to be restrained. He is winning.

It was not always so. Ditka was an All-Pro tight end during his first stay with the Bears, but he came back to Chicago four years ago as an untested Dallas assistant coach. His selection by Chicago's owner, the late George Halas, was said to reveal more about Halas' sense of loyalty than Ditka's acumen.

But the Bears' 1984 march as far the National Football Conference title game — they were derailed by San Francisco 23-0 — and their 9-0 performance so far this year — including the mild revenge that came with beating the 49ers — has silenced most of those critics.

It has also changed Ditka from a coach who two years ago took out his frustrations on a locker in Baltimore, breaking his hand, to one who has learned to live with everyone's shortcomings, including his own.

"I think he's reached the point where he can have confidence in his players and the abilities of this team," said defensive lineman Dan Hampton, a tough All-Pro player in the Ditka mold. "I really think he came here and tried to get too involved in every facet of the game ... maybe part of it because he was new," Hampton continued. "But now he understands we're professionals and he lets us play our game."

Indeed, Ditka has become secure enough in that confidence and his own hunches to convert 300-plus-pound rookie defensive lineman William "Refrigerator" Perry into a running back. What many assumed was that Perry's conversion from immovable object to irresistible force was simply Ditka's way of paying San Francisco back for a similar stunt in the NFC title game.

But those who figured that angle underestimated both Perry's talent and Ditka's boldness.

Perry scored one touchdown rushing and paved the way for Walter Payton on two other short-yardage scores two weeks ago against the Packers. Sunday, he caught a 4-yard touchdown pass against Green Bay, with the Packers using just one corner back on the assumption that the team with the most beef at the line of scrimmage would be the team that succeeded.

That kind of thinking — a straight-ahead show of force — was a page out of the old Ditka's book.

"And let me just tell you," Ditka said, a twinkle in his eye as he mulled over the possibilities, "William can throw it, too."

Refrigerator ploy had roots in Chicago

REDWOOD CITY, Calif. (AP) — Refrigerator" Perry played for the Chicago Bears 22 years ago, according to Coach Bill Walsh of the San Francisco 49ers.

"We had used a lineman in the backfield when I was a high school coach. That's probably where the idea to try it last year came from," Walsh said Tuesday. "The player was Steve Barnett, an offensive tackle. He went on to become an All-American (Oregon) and, as a matter of fact, he later played for the Bears (1963)."

Last January, when the 49ers advanced to Super Bowl XIX by beating the Bears 23-0 in the National Football Conference title game, Walsh sent 265-pound Guy McIntyre, a rookie offensive guard, into the game as a running back to provide extra blocking power on a few plays, including a 9-yard touchdown run by Wendell Tyler.

Four weeks ago, Chicago Coach Mike Ditka answered back by using the 308-pound Perry, a defensive tackle, as a ball carrier on two plays which gained a total of four yards late in a game the Bears won 26-10.

Since then, the rookie "Refrigerator" has become the hottest attraction in the National Football League, with his backfield appearances and has scored two touchdowns for the undefeated Bears.

"I haven't followed the Bears that closely, maybe purposely," said Walsh, whose defending NFL champs are only 5-4 this season. "But I did hear that Perry caught a touchdown pass on Sunday."

Walsh's first job as a head coach was at Fremont (Calif.) Washington Union High School. Barnett was a star on the 1958 team which finished 9-1.

At 215 pounds, Barnett was huge only by high school standards, Walsh noted, adding that in the 1950s, the most likely nickname would be "The Icebox."

Kaylor decks Christie in wild British bout

WEMBLEY, England (AP) — A controversial middleweight boxing match that police tried to ban went ahead Tuesday night and turned into one of the most explosive fights in many years in a British ring.

In a final eliminator for the British middleweight title, Mark Kaylor twice got off the floor to knock out Errol Christie in the eighth round of a scheduled 12-round bout at Wembley Arena.

At a press conference last month, the two fighters came to blows outside a plush London club. Police feared the impromptu brawl might flare up racial tension in the wake of several recent incidents of mob violence on Britain's streets.

Kaylor is white and Christie black.

And although both fighters said there was nothing racial about their scuffle, local police chiefs asked boxing officials to ban the contest.

But after pledges by the promoters that extra security measures would be taken at the 10,000-seat arena, the British Boxing Board of Control ignored the police request.

To defuse tension in Tuesday's supercharged atmosphere, both boxers entered the ring together without the traditional fanfare and spotlights.

Kaylor's notoriously hostile fans — 200 of whom were evicted from the same arena at one of his previous fights — booed loudly when Christie's name was announced.

Midway through the contest one of the fans set off a firecracker in the indoor arena, but there were no other misdemeanors from the spectators, who were separated from the ringside by a wooden barrier.

Instead, the action was left to the two fighters, who had stated publicly their dislike for each other.

Kaylor, his future at a crossroads after three recent defeats following 29 consecutive victories, had Christie on the floor after just 35 seconds.

Christie, the pre-fight favorite who had stopped 16 of his 21 opponents inside the first four rounds, responded dramatically with a clubbing right that in turn had Kaylor on the deck.

After a first round reminiscent in its aggression of last April's Marvin Hagler-Thomas Hearns clash for the undisputed world middleweight title, the two Britons continued at a furious pace.

A stinging right to the jaw had Kaylor down again in round three, but he again recovered courageously and had Christie hanging on at the end of the round.

The all-out war raged on, Kaylor's hooks and uppercuts whipping through Christie's guard. At the end of round four, Kaylor was warned for hitting after the bell.

For the next three rounds, Christie hung on grimly as his determined opponent — the former British and Commonwealth champion — ripped in a flurry of stinging body punches.

But in round eight, there was no bell to come to Christie's aid and he crawled helplessly on his knees to his corner after Kaylor unleashed another right hand that ended the contest with 25 seconds remaining of the round.

Winslow absent from San Diego workouts

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Tight end Kellen Winslow, reportedly upset over a lack of playing time since returning from a severe knee injury, skipped a Chargers practice and faces disciplinary action, San Diego Coach Don Coryell said Tuesday.

Winslow, a three-time National Football League All-Pro selection, failed to show up for team meetings and a light workout Monday, Coryell said.

Concerned about Winslow's absence, Chargers officials contacted the player's representatives to determine Winslow's whereabouts.

"We just called up and were assured he wasn't dead," Coryell said of Winslow. "That was our concern, that he got in an accident or something. Heck, we don't know. Other than that we don't know anything. I don't have any idea what his situation is."

The Associated Press called Winslow's office, but was told by his answering service that he was not available.

Winslow's agent, Jim Steiner, told The Tribune of San Diego that Winslow was unhappy about his lack of playing time in San Diego's 30-10 victory over the Denver Broncos on Sunday.

"I know he wanted to play," Steiner said. "It was his home debut. He felt he worked hard in the off-season and the team wanted him back. I think he wanted to play more than three plays."

Winslow was generally regarded as pro football's finest tight end before suffering torn knee ligaments in an Oct. 21, 1984 game against the Los Angeles Raiders.

After spending a year rehabilitating his surgically reconstructed knee, Winslow returned Oct. 20, when the Chargers played the Vikings in Minnesota. He has seven receptions for 62 yards. He didn't catch a pass in the Denver game.

Winslow is listed on the Chargers' depth chart as the third-string tight end, behind Eric Sievers and Pete Holohan.

Coryell said Winslow wasn't used much in Sunday's game because he came out of the Chargers' Oct. 28 game against the Raiders with sore ribs.

"As far as not using him that much in the Denver) ball game, very obviously we were trying to win and Kellen wasn't able to practice much last week," Coryell said. "We just felt both Eric and Pete were much better prepared in order to do the things that had to be done in order to win."

Winslow can be fined as much as $500 for missing a team workout.

"He's just like any other player. Any player who misses a practice or meeting or treatment period will be fined," Coryell said.

The Chargers were off Tuesday but were scheduled to resume workouts Wednesday.

Computer knows reasons for NFL leaders to fade

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Several National Football League teams which were strong last season but have been disappointments so far this year have one thing in common — they've all lost ground in yards per pass attempt.

Bud Goode, a statistical analyst for several NFL teams, pointed at the San Francisco 49ers and Miami Dolphins in making the statement Tuesday.

Goode said the defending Super Bowl champion 49ers are down 23 percent from last year in yards per passing attempt and the defending American Football Conference champion Dolphins are down 22 percent from 1984.

Other teams who are down significantly, Goode said, are the Washington Redskins (22 percent), the St. Louis Cardinals (21 percent), the Green Bay Packers (20 percent), and the Pittsburgh Steelers and Seattle Seahawks (each down 15 percent).

San Francisco, Miami, Washington and Seattle all have 5-4 records. Pittsburgh and St. Louis are 4-5, while Green Bay is 3-6. Much more was expected of all six teams.

Unlike the NFL, Goode includes the quarterback sack as a passing attempt.

According to Goode, there are two reasons why the above-mentioned teams have fallen — the new rule which cuts down on pass interference penalties and the fact that all six teams have undergone personnel changes, many because of injuries.

The Redskins rank 28th and last in the NFL in yards per passing attempt — 4.48. No team which ranked last in the league on yards per passing attempt has gone to the playoffs in 16 years, Goode said.

The Dolphins led the NFL in this department last season, averaging 8.56 yards per pass. Miami's average in its nine games so far this year is 6.68 yards.

The NFL leader so far this season is San Diego, which is averaging 6.91 yards per pass. Miami is in second place, followed by the Chicago Bears, who at 6.66 have improved 14 percent, the highest increase among NFC teams.

The teams which have fallen the most on yards per pass are also the teams which have fallen the most on offense and winning margin.

Goode said that his computer shows that an improvement or debit of one yard per pass is worth 3½ points. So Miami's loss of almost two yards should result in seven fewer points for the Dolphins this season as compared to last season. In point of fact, the team has scored eight less points per game this year.

Players accuse owners of unfair practices

NEW YORK (AP) — The major league baseball players' union has filed an unfair labor practice charge against Commissioner Peter Ueberroth and the 26 club owners on the grounds that they improperly cancelled the sport's drug-testing program.

The union, in one complaint, charges that the program was ended because the players would not go along with Ueberroth's call for voluntary testing outside the program, association chief Don Fehr said Tuesday.

Another complaint in the charge filed with the National Labor Relations Board alleges that Ueberroth's call for voluntary testing was an illegal attempt to circumvent the union. One month after the commissioner held a news conference at which he disclosed he had asked the players to voluntarily agree to testing, the owners voted to end the 1984 joint drug agreement with the union.

"That termination of the agreement was in whole or in part occasioned by the players' refusal to accede to the unlawful activity of bypassing the union," Fehr, the acting executive director of the players association, said. "You can terminate the agreement for some reasons, but not for improper reasons."

Ueberroth was attending a meeting in Phoenix, Ariz., and not immediately available for comment.

Under the 1984 agreement, testing was limited to players with known drug problems. At the start of the season, Ueberroth unilaterally announced that all baseball personnel not covered by union agreements — the major-league players and umpires — would have to undergo mandatory testing. It included minor leaguers and club executives.

On Sept. 24, Ueberroth appealed directly to the players to submit to a program of voluntary testing. The players responded for the most part that they would not accept such a program unless arrangements for testing were made through the union.

The Player Relations Committee, the owners' bargaining unit, also was included in the complaints.

The owners, through the PRC, made their announcement terminating the agreement during the World Series. The union filed its complaints last week.

NLRB regional director Daniel Silverman said Monday in New York that he will conduct a preliminary inquiry to decide whether to conduct a formal hearing on the complaints, that he would make his decision within 45 days and that any formal hearing would be public and indicated that Ueberroth would be called to testify.

Dye defends Jackson against fans' charges

AUBURN, Ala. (AP) — Auburn football Coach Pat Dye came to the defense of Bo Jackson Tuesday, rebutting criticism that the running back can't handle hard-hitting games.

"When people are saying the ridiculous things they are saying, it is hard for me not to say something," Dye said as he discussed last Saturday's loss to Florida.

"Our fans and some of the media expect Bo to perform miracles every week like he has done on other occasions. But if you cut the guy, he'll bleed. He has bones that will break like they did last year and his muscles will bruise," Dye said at his weekly news conference.

Jackson, a Heisman Trophy contender, was injured near the end of the first half and carried the ball only one time in the second half as Auburn lost 14-10 to Florida. Jackson told reporters after the game that he suffered a bruised thigh and that it "spasmed up," making it impossible to run.

During Auburn's only other loss of the year, 38-20 to Tennessee, Jackson took himself out of the game with a knee injury in the second half.

Dye said Auburn's loss to Florida was a team defeat and shouldn't be blamed on any one player.

"Bo didn't have anything to do with us not beating Florida," Dye said. "We had all the opportunities in the world to win the football game. We never intended to be a one-man football team when the season started and we're not now.

"For anybody to question whether Bo has courage or whether he'll play in the big games or not, (they) need to go back and check his record of playing in the big football games over the years."

U.S. golfers trying to break 0-3 skid

KAPALUA, Hawaii (AP) — The United States, holding a 0-3 record in international team competition this year, plays Australia Wednesday in the first round of the new, four-team Nissan Cup World Golf Championship.

"It just shows what's going on in the rest of the world today," Ray Floyd, captain of the six-man American team, said Tuesday of the United States' string of team losses this season.

The Americans lost to Great Britain-Europe in the Ryder Cup matches in England, lost to Australia in the finals of the multiple-team Dunhill Cup in Scotland, and last week lost to Japan in the ABC Cup.

Leading representatives of those winners also are playing for their countries in this new event that involves teams from Japan and Europe as well as the United States and Australia.

Despite the shutout of American forces this year, Floyd was confident and optimistic.

"All my guys are playing well. Corey (Pavin) won (the individual title) in Japan last week. Curtis (Strange) is playing well. Lanny (Wadkins) is playing extremely well. And I couldn't be more pleased with the state of my own game," Floyd said.

Mark O'Meara and Calvin Peete are the other members of the American team.

The European team is led by British Open champion Sandy Lyle of Scotland.

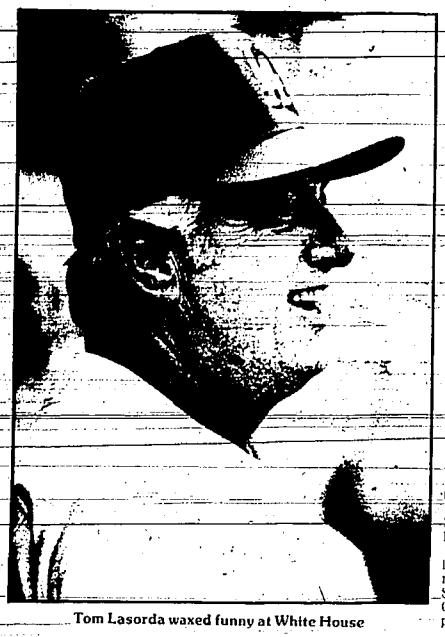
Lasorda wows Washington press corps



Tom Lasorda waxed funny at White House

Yurchenko?

"Yeah, I know him. He was a left-hander. Played with the Padres. Owchinko.

Star Wars?

"I got a couple guys who are going to join that outfit."

Achille Laure?

"I followed that closely because it was an Italian ship."

Lasorda, the manager of the Los Angeles Dodgers, came calling on President Reagan on Tuesday and substituted at home plate briefly for deputy press secretary Larry Speakes.

What advice does he have for the president at the summit meeting later this month? How should he handle Mikhail Gorbachev?

"I think he should go over there and just play hardball.

Be friendly? Whip him?

"I think he should make every effort to be as friendly as possible but let him know we are the greatest country in the world. That would be a good, high, hard one."

Lasorda met briefly in the Oval Office with Reagan, gave him a blue Dodgers' tie and told the president that he looked good.

"I feel good, when can I pitch?" Reagan is said to have replied. Reporters were not invited in.

But they had a good crack at him in the briefing room. He didn't really mistake Vitaly Yurchenko, the Soviet KGB defector, for Bob Owehinko, who used to be a relief pitcher for the Padres, but, hey, a funny line is a funny line.

He also was asked whether he should have pitched to Jack Clark in the sixth game of the National League playoffs against St. Louis. The Dodgers were leading 5-4 with two outs in the top of the ninth in Los Angeles and there were Cardinal runners on second and third.

Lasorda had the choice of walking Clark to load the bases and pitch to the next batter, Andy Van Slyke, or pitching to Clark. Lasorda decided on the latter and Clark hit a three-run homer and the Dodgers lost the series.

Well, should he have pitched to Clark?

"After he hit the home run, my wife knows I should have walked him and she don't know anything about baseball," Lasorda said.

Among other opinions: Pete Rose, not Whitey Herzog, should have been National League Manager of the Year; bet the family jewels on the Dodgers next year; ABC's Sam Donaldson is an outstanding man in his field, and generous, too, since he wants to donate $25,000 each year to the family of the Unknown Soldier.

Women can do anything men can do and if he had a third baseman — baseswoman? — who could hit 30 home runs, he would sign her right now.

And, Lasorda confided, his wife told him recently that after 35 years of marriage she feels he loves the Dodgers and baseball more than he loves her.

"I said, 'yeah,'" said Lasorda. "But I love you more than football and basketball."

Giants' Gray ends hold out

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — The New York Giants on Tuesday signed holdout wide receiver Earnest Gray to a contract reportedly worth between $200,000 and $225,000 in each of its two years, the club announced.

Gray, a seven-year National Football League veteran and second-round Giants draft choice out of Memphis State, agreed to terms of the contract last week and signed after passing a physical exam Tuesday, said team spokesman Ed Croke.

"That brings into the fold the last of the holdouts from this year," he said. Veteran All-Pro defensive back Mark Haynes signed with the Giants three weeks ago, ending his contract holdout.

Ewing pace worth millions

NEW YORK (AP) — Rookie center Patrick Ewing's 10-year National Basketball Association contract with the New York Knicks is worth $31.2 million with the first six years guaranteed, according to a story by Peter Vecsey in Tuesday's New York Post.

The newspaper says his salary ranges from $750,000 for 1985 to $3.75 million in 1994, the final year of the contract, that $3 million of the total package is deferred, payable in 1995, and that the contract includes a $4.2 million interest-free loan.

Vecsey, who identifies the Knicks' front office as his source, says of the contract: "The first six years are fully guaranteed and fully protected, irrespective of skill, basketball injuries, basketball-related injuries (any body-building or firming-up exercises), mental breakdown, personal (this provision isn't defined) and death."

Jones forced to retire

LONDON (AP) — British welterweight boxer Colin Jones, whose three attempts to win the world title ended in failure, was advised by his manager Tuesday to retire after he collapsed at home with a back injury.

Jones' manager, Eddie Thomas, said the fighter was hospitalized after suffering a spinal injury Monday at his home in Gorseinon, South Wales.

Porter undergoes surgery

PULLMAN, Wash. (AP) — Kerry Porter, the Pacific-10 Conference's leading rusher in 1983, underwent successful surgery on Monday to repair a shoulder separation and fractured shoulder blade.

Porter, a junior running back, was injured in Washington State's loss to Arizona State on Oct. 26.

Porter will be sidelined for this season's remaining games against Montana State on Nov. 16 and Washington on Nov. 23, WSU Sports Information Director Rod Commons said today. Porter is expected to completely recover for the 1986 season, Commons added.

Has success softened Bears' Ditka?

CHICAGO (AP) — Has success forged a new image for Mike Ditka?

It was a question put to the man now in his fourth and most successful year as Chicago Bears coach.

Ditka bit his lip, allowed himself a quick smile and replied:

"I'm glad it wasn't (the old) Mike out there (Sunday, when the Bears defeated the Green Bay Packers 16-10 in a mistake-filled, brawl-beset contest). That Mike would have been awfully excited for a while."

The questioner persisted. Was there a new or different Mike off the field?

"I don't drive the highways as much," said Ditka, referring to a much-publicized arrest in Chicago for driving under the influence of alcohol following a victory over San Francisco last month. "That's for sure."

Secure because he already has been awarded a second three-year contract, buoyed by success and hailed recently as something of an innovator, Ditka can afford to lampoon his new image. He can afford to be restrained. He is winning.

It was not always so. Ditka was an All-Pro tight end during his first stay with the Bears, but he came back to Chicago four years ago as an untested Dallas assistant coach. His selection by Chicago's owner, the late George Halas, was said to reveal more about Halas' sense of loyalty than Ditka's acumen.

But the Bears' 1984 march as far the National Football Conference title game — they were derailed by San Francisco 23-0 — and their 9-0 performance so far this year — including the mild revenge that came with beating the 49ers — has silenced most of those critics.

It has also changed Ditka from a coach who two years ago took out his frustrations on a locker in Baltimore, breaking his hand, to one who has learned to live with everyone's shortcomings, including his own.

"I think he's reached the point where he can have confidence in his players and the abilities of this team," said defensive lineman Dan Hampton, a tough All-Pro player in the Ditka mold. "I really think he came here and tried to get too involved in every facet of the game ... maybe part of it because he was new," Hampton continued. "But now he understands we're professionals and he lets us play our game."

Indeed, Ditka has become secure enough in that confidence and his own hunches to convert 300-plus-pound rookie defensive lineman William "Refrigerator" Perry into a running back. What many assumed was that Perry's conversion from immovable object to irresistible force was simply Ditka's way of paying San Francisco back for a similar stunt in the NFC title game.

But those who figured that angle underestimated both Perry's talent and Ditka's boldness.

Perry scored one touchdown rushing and paved the way for Walter Payton on two other short-yardage scores two weeks ago against the Packers. Sunday, he caught a 4-yard touchdown pass against Green Bay, with the Packers using just one corner back on the assumption that the team with the most beef at the line of scrimmage would be the team that succeeded.

That kind of thinking — a straight-ahead show of force — was a page out of the old Ditka's book.

"And let me just tell you," Ditka said, a twinkle in his eye as he mulled over the possibilities, "William can throw it, too."

Refrigerator ploy had roots in Chicago

REDWOOD CITY, Calif. (AP) — A forerunner of William "The Refrigerator" Perry played for the Chicago Bears 22 years ago, according to Coach Bill Walsh of the San Francisco 49ers.

"We had used a lineman in the backfield when I was a high school coach. That's probably where the idea to try it last year came from," Walsh said Tuesday. "The player was Steve Barnett, an offensive tackle. He went on to become an All-American (Oregon) and, as a matter of fact, he later played for the Bears (1963)."

Last January, when the 49ers advanced to Super Bowl XIX by beating the Bears 23-0 in the National Football Conference title game, Walsh sent 265-pound Guy McIntyre, a rookie offensive guard, into the game as a running back to provide extra blocking power on a few plays, including a 9-yard touchdown run by Wendell Tyler.

Four weeks ago, Chicago Coach Mike Ditka answered back by using the 308-pound Perry, a defensive tackle, as a ball carrier on two plays which gained a total of four yards late in a game the Bears won 26-10.

Since then, the rookie "Refrigerator" has become the hottest attraction in the National Football League with his backfield appearances and has scored two touchdowns for the undefeated Bears.

"I haven't followed the Bears that closely, maybe purposely," said Walsh, whose defending NFL champs are only 5-4 this season. "But I did hear that Perry caught a touchdown pass on Sunday."

Walsh's first job as a head coach was at Fremont (Calif.) Washington Union High School. Barnett was a star on the 1958 team which finished 9-1.

At 215 pounds, Barnett was huge only by high school standards, Walsh noted, adding that in the 1950s, the most likely nickname would be "The Icebox."

Kaylor decks Christie in wild British bout

WEMBLEY, England (AP) — A controversial middleweight boxing match that police tried to ban went ahead Tuesday night and turned into one of the most explosive fights in many years in a British ring.

In a final eliminator for the British middleweight title, Mark Kaylor twice got off the floor to knock out Errol Christie in the eighth round of a scheduled 12-round bout at Wembley Arena.

At a press conference last month, the two fighters came to blows outside a plush London club. Police feared the impromptu brawl might flare up racial tension in the wake of several recent incidents of mob violence on Britain's streets.

Kaylor is white and Christie black. And although both fighters said there was nothing racial about their scuffle, local police chiefs asked boxing officials to ban the contest.

But after pledges by the promotors that extra security measures would be taken at the 10,000-seat arena, the British Boxing Board of the Control ignored the police request.

To defuse tension in Tuesday's supercharged atmosphere, both boxers entered the ring together without the traditional fanfare and spotlights.

Kaylor's notoriously hostile fans — 200 of whom were evicted from the same arena at one of his previous fights — booed loudly when Christie's name was announced.

Midway through the contest one of the fans set off a firecracker in the indoor arena, but there were no other misdemeanors from the spectators, who were separated from the ringside by a wooden barrier.

Kaylor, his future at a crossroads after three recent defeats following 29 consecutive victories, had Christie on the floor after just 35 seconds.

Christie, the pre-fight favorite who had stopped 16 of his 21 opponents inside the first four rounds, responded dramatically with a club-bing right that in turn had Kaylor on the deck.

After a first round reminiscent in its aggression of last April's Marvin Hagler-Thomas Hearns clash for the undisputed world middleweight title, the two Britons continued at a furious pace.

A stinging right to the jaw had Kaylor down again in round three, but he again recovered courageously and had Christie hanging on at the end of the round.

The all-out war raged on, Kaylor's hooks and uppercuts whipping through Christie's guard. At the end of round four, Kaylor was warned for hitting after the bell.

For the next three rounds, Christie hung on grimly as his determined opponent — the former British and Commonwealth champion — ripped in a flurry of stinging body punches.

But in round eight, there was no bell to come to Christie's aid, and he crawled helplessly on his knees to his corner after Kaylor unleashed another right hand that ended the contest with 25 seconds remaining of the round.

Winslow absent from San Diego workouts

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Tight end Kellen Winslow, reportedly upset over a lack of playing time since returning from a severe knee injury, skipped a Chargers practice and faces disciplinary action, San Diego Coach Don Coryell said Tuesday.

Winslow, a three-time National Football League All-Pro selection, failed to show up for team meetings and a light workout Monday, Coryell said.

Concerned about Winslow's absence, Chargers officials contacted the player's representatives to determine Winslow's whereabouts.

"We just called up and were assured he wasn't dead," Coryell said of Winslow. "That was our concern, that he got in an accident or something. Heck, we don't know. Other than that we don't know anything. I don't have any idea what his situation is."

The Associated Press called Winslow's office, but was told by his answering service that he was not available.

Winslow's agent, Jim Steiner, told The Tribune of San Diego that Winslow was unhappy about his lack of playing time in San Diego's 30-10 victory over the Denver Broncos on Sunday.

"I know he wanted to play," Steiner said. "It was his home debut. He felt he worked hard in the off-season and the team wanted him back. I think he wanted to play more than three plays."

Winslow was generally regarded as pro football's finest tight end before suffering torn knee ligaments in an Oct. 21, 1984 game against the Los Angeles Raiders.

After spending a year rehabilitating his surgically reconstructed knee, Winslow returned Oct. 20, when the Chargers played the Vikings in Minnesota. He has seven receptions for 62 yards. He didn't catch a pass in the Denver game.

Winslow is listed on the Chargers' depth chart as the third-string tight end, behind Eric Sievers and Pete Holohan.

Coryell said Winslow wasn't used much in Sunday's game because he came out of the Chargers' Oct. 28 game against the Raiders with sore ribs.

"As far as not using him that much in the (Denver) ball game, very obviously we were trying to win and Kellen wasn't able to practice much last week," Coryell said. "We just felt both Eric and Pete were much better prepared in order to do the things that had to be done in order to win."

Winslow can be fined as much as $500 for missing a team workout.

"He's just like any other player. Any player who misses a practice or meeting or treatment period will be fined," Coryell said.

The Chargers were off Tuesday but were scheduled to resume workouts Wednesday.

Computer knows reasons for NFL leaders to fade

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Several National Football League teams which were strong last season but have been disappointments so far this year have one thing in common — they've all lost ground in yards per pass attempt.

But Goode, a statistical analyst for several NFL teams, pointed at the San Francisco 49ers and Miami Dolphins in making the statement Tuesday.

Goode said the defending Super Bowl champion 49ers are down 23 percent from last year in yards per passing attempt and the defending American Football Conference champion Dolphins are down 22 percent from 1984.

Other teams who are down significantly, Goode said, are the Washington Redskins (22 percent), the St. Louis Cardinals (21 percent), the Green Bay Packers (20 percent), and the Pittsburgh Steelers and Seattle Seahawks (each down 15 percent).

San Francisco, Miami, Washington and Seattle all have 5-4 records. Pittsburgh and St. Louis are 4-5, while Green Bay is 3-6. Much more was expected of all six teams.

Unlike the NFL, Goode includes the quarterback sack as a passing attempt.

According to Goode, there are two reasons why the above-mentioned teams have fallen — the new rule which cuts down on pass interference penalties and the fact that all six teams have undergone personnel changes, many because of injuries.

The Redskins rank 28th and last in the NFL in yards per passing attempt — 4.48. No team which ranked last in the league yards-per-pass-ing attempt has gone to the playoffs in 16 years, Goode said.

The Dolphins led the NFL in this department last season, averaging 8.56 yards per pass. Miami's average in its nine games so far this year is 6.68 yards.

The NFL leader so far this season is San Diego, which is averaging 6.91 yards per pass. Miami is in second place, followed by the Chicago Bears, who at 6.66 have improved 14 percent, the highest increase among NFC teams.

The teams which have fallen the most on yards per pass are also the teams which have fallen the most on offense and winning margin.

Goode said that his computer shows that an improvement or debit of one yard per pass is worth 3½ points. So Miami's loss of almost two yards should result in seven fewer points for the Dolphins this season as compared to last season. In point of fact, the team has scored eight less points per game this year.

Players accuse owners of unfair practices

NEW YORK (AP) — The major league baseball players' union has filed an unfair labor practice charge against Commissioner Peter Ueberroth and the 26 club owners on the grounds that they improperly cancelled the sport's drug-testing program.

The union, in one complaint, charges that the program was ended because the players would not go along with Ueberroth's call for voluntary testing outside the program, association chief Don Fehr said Tuesday.

Another complaint in the charge filed with the National Labor Relations Board alleges that Ueberroth's call for voluntary testing was an illegal attempt to circumvent the union. One month after the commissioner held a news conference at which he disclosed he had asked the players to voluntarily agree to testing, the owners voted to end the 1984 joint drug agreement with the union.

"That termination of the agreement was in whole or in part occasioned by the players' refusal to accede to the unlawful activity of bypassing the union," Fehr, the acting executive director of the players association, said. "You can terminate the agreement for some reasons, but not for improper reasons."

Ueberroth was attending a meeting in Phoenix, Ariz., and not immediately available for comment.

Under the 1984 agreement, testing was limited to players with known drug problems. At the start of the season, Ueberroth unilaterally announced that all baseball personnel — not covered by union agreements — the major league players and umpires — would have to undergo mandatory testing. It included minor leaguers and club executives.

On Sept. 24, Ueberroth appealed directly to the players to submit to a program of voluntary testing. The players responded for the most part that they would not accept such a program unless arrangements for testing were made through the union.

The Player Relations Committee, the owners' bargaining unit, also was included in the complaints.

The owners, through the PRC, made their announcement terminating the agreement during the World Series. The union filed its complaints last week.

NLRB regional director Daniel Silverman said Monday in New York that he will conduct a preliminary inquiry to decide whether to conduct a formal hearing on the complaints, that he would make his decision within 45 days and that any formal hearing would be public and indicated that Ueberroth would be called to testify.

Dye defends Jackson against fans' charges

AUBURN, Ala. (AP) — Auburn football Coach Pat Dye came to the defense of Bo Jackson Tuesday, rebutting criticism that the running back can't handle hard-hitting games.

"When people are saying the ridiculous things they are saying, it is hard for me not to say something," Dye said as he discussed last Saturday's loss to Florida.

"Our fans and some of the media expect Bo to perform miracles every week like he has done on other occasions. But if you cut the guy, he'll bleed. He has bones that will break like they did last year and his muscles will bruise," Dye said at his weekly news conference.

Jackson, a Heisman Trophy contender, was injured near the end of the first half and carried the ball only one time in the second half as Auburn lost 14-10 to Florida. Jackson told reporters after the game that he suffered a bruised thigh and that it "spasmed up," making it impossible to run.

During Auburn's only other loss of the year, 38-20 to Tennessee, Jackson took himself out of the game with a knee injury in the second half.

Dye said Auburn's loss to Florida was a team defeat and shouldn't be blamed on any one player.

"Bo didn't have anything to do with us not beating Florida," Dye said. "We had all the opportunities in the world to win the football game. We never intended to be a one-man football team when the season started and we're not now.

"For anybody to question whether Bo has courage or whether he'll play in the big games or not, (they) need to go back and check his record of playing in the big football games over the years."

U.S. golfers trying to break 0-3 skid

KAPALUA, Hawaii (AP) — The United States, holding a 0-3 record in international team competition this year, plays Australia Wednesday in the first round of the new, four-team Nissan Cup World Golf Championship.

"It just shows what's going on in the rest of the world today," Ray Floyd, captain of the six-man American team, said Tuesday of the United States' string of team losses this season.

The Americans lost to Great Britain-Europe in the Ryder Cup matches in England, lost to Australia in the finals of the multiple-team Dunhill Cup in Scotland and last week lost to Japan in the ABC Cup.

Leading representatives of those winners also are playing for their countries in this new event that involves teams from Japan and Europe as well as the United States and Australia.

Despite the shutout of American forces this year, Floyd was confident and optimistic.

"All my guys are playing well. Corey (Pavin) won (the individual title) in Japan last week. Curtis (Strange) is playing well. Lanny (Wadkins) is playing extremely well. And I couldn't be more pleased with the state of my own game," Floyd said.

Mark O'Meara and Calvin Peete are the other members of the American team.

The European team is led by British Open champion Sandy Lyle of Scotland.

IMPORTANT INFORMATION

- Contact a real estate agent if you wish to submit any property or to make an offer.
- Purchasers and their agents are to arrange the financing for all sales. Properties listed as insurable are eligible for FHA insurance.
- Sealed bids are required on properties listed in Groups I, II and III. The bid period closes at 10:00 a.m. on the date stated. Bids are also opened at that time. Offerors and their agents are invited to attend bid openings which are held in Room 365 of the Federal Building / U.S. Court House at 550 West Fort Street, Boise, Idaho.
- The successful offer will be determined on the basis of greatest net return to HUD.
- An earnest money deposit equal to five percent of the purchase price, but not less than $500 nor more than $2,000 will be held in the broker's trust account.
- All offers will be considered. The successful offer from the sealed bid period is frequently higher than the listed price.
- Properties which are not sold as a result of the competitive bid period, immediately become extended listings. Offers on extended listings may be submitted at any time and are considered at 4:00 p.m. each working day, and are accepted or rejected at that time.
- PLEASE NOTE: New forms are required for submission of offers. Brokers should pick up new instructions and forms at HUD office.
- These properties may contain code violation.
- HUD does not warranty any property.
- Errors in these listings do not become official through publication. All information, including listed price, must agree with files in the Boise HUD Office.
- HUD properties are offered for sale to qualified purchasers without regard to the purchaser's race, color or national origin. Purchasers should contact real estate agent of their choosing.

If you can score a ruff with either the trump ace or the trump six, it may seem silly to waste the ace. Nevertheless, wasting the ace is sometimes the only winning play.

Philippe Cronier of Paris played today's hand in a European Championship a couple of years ago. He ruffed the second diamond and led a spade to dummy's 10, West taking his jack.

West took time to visualize South's hand and then made the most effective lead of a trump. Had he not done so, Cronier would have finessed in clubs and taken eight trump winners via a crossruff, making a total of 10 tricks.

The trump lead made things more difficult, but Cronier had the answer. He won the trump in hand and ruffed a spade with dummy's ace of trumps instead of the six. He then led dummy's trump six to his king to draw trumps and concede a spade, establishing the suit and limiting the defenders to two spades and a diamond.

Why ruff with the trump ace? Had Cronier ruffed with dummy's six, he would have lost control. After cashing dummy's trump ace, he would have had no easy entry back to his hand and thus would never have been able to bring in the spade suit.

Time to test appetizers for holidays

Nancy Joy Jones
Valley cooking

Don't forget. Tomorrow is the deadline for sending in recipes for the Holiday Cookbook contest sponsored by The Times-News. Go write out that favorite recipe and mail it to us by tomorrow. You could be one of 25 cooks in Magic Valley to win a cash prize and fame and glory by having your recipe featured in a special section to be published Nov. 21.

You will never know unless you try, so go ahead and do it. You'll feel a sense of accomplishment just by entering — and you may be a winner.

Since I get to be one of the tasting judges, I might urge you to do something with chocolate, whipped cream and nuts. But, there will be other judges, too, so don't worry, I even like liver!

As a matter of fact, one thing I enjoy about being a food columnist is I get to try lots and lots of foods, and most of them I really like. And, I find most (nice) people will share a recipe.

One near disaster over a lost recipe that had made a big hit was handily resolved because I had shared it. It was a lesson I'll never forget. The only problem I have anymore is forgetting where I've put a recipe.

Sometimes recipes disappear for months. Just the other day I found a super one for asparagus. If I can just find it again next April, we will all be ahead!

I really have a problem with filing. Logically, most recipes could fit into several categories, right? So where I put a particular recipe is a rather whimsical thing depending, I guess, on my mood or the phase of the moon. It doesn't make for quick retrieval.

If you are looking for a couple of different appetizers for the approaching holiday season, here's an idea. Get out your old fondue pot and get it ready to go. You could also use an electric frying pan or a saucepan on a hot plate.

This recipe could be a side dish accompanying a meat fondue that you cook in oil. (Duck breasts, cubed, are super served this way with a couple of dipping sauces.)

Besides the fondue pot or substitute, you'll need a 2-quart saucepan, a 9x9x2-inch deep pan, good grade plastic wrap or foil and a good freezer container that's moisture and vapor proof.

FRIED CHEESE-SHRIMP SQUARES

¼ cup butter or margarine
½ cup all purpose flour
¼ teaspoon grated nutmeg
⅛ teaspoon pepper
1½ cups milk
3 beaten egg yolks
2 cups shredded natural Gruyere cheese or natural Swiss (8 ounces)
½ cup grated parmesan
1 6 oz. package frozen shrimp, thawed, drained and chopped
3 egg whites
1 cup dry bread crumbs, finely ground oil for deep frying
a recipe for spinach mayonnaise (which follows)

In the saucepan, melt the butter or margarine over medium heat and whisk in the flour, nutmeg and pepper. Slowly add the milk, stirring constantly, and continue to cook until mixture is thickened and bubbly. Cook another minute and then stir about ½ cup of this mixture into the beaten egg yolks, then return to the saucepan and blend the egg mixture into the rest.

Keep stirring until bubbly again and then add the cheese and stir until melted.

Remove from heat and stir in the shrimp.

Line the pan with the foil or plastic wrap leaving an overhang. Spread the mixture in the pan and place in the freezer until firm.

Lift the ends of the foil and remove mixture from pan. Cut into 1-inch squares.

Beat the egg whites with 1 tablespoon water until frothy. Dip the cheese and shrimp squares into the egg whites then in the bread crumbs.

You can now either use them immediately or transfer them to the freezer container and freeze until needed.

When you are ready to serve the squares, arrange them on a platter. At the table put the oil into the fondue pot (about half full) and heat to 365 degrees.

Spear the squares with long skewers and immerse in oil about 2 minutes. Serve them with this:

SPINACH MAYONNAISE

1 cup mayonnaise
½ cup fresh spinach leaves, finely chopped
2 tablespoons fresh parsley, finely chopped
2 tablespoons milk
1 tablespoon lemon juice
½ teaspoon dried taragon, crushed

Blend all together until smooth and chill.

If you would decide to combine cooking the cheese squares with a meat, this mayonnaise makes a nice dipping sauce for the lighter meats, too.

This next recipe is a good varia-

Last call for recipe contest entries

TWIN FALLS — Two panels have been selected this week to judge the Times-News Holiday Cookbook Contest.

The deadline for mailing in contest entries is Thursday, Nov. 7. Three finalists will be picked in each of the eight categories, and a grand prize winner will be announced at the taste test on Nov. 15. The grand prize winner will win $100, and category finalists will receive $25 for first place, $15 for second place and $10 for third place.

The panel of judges for the taste test, which will be held in The Times-News conference room, will include Scott Wamsley, chef in the Lodge Dining Room at Sun Valley Lodge; Alice Anderson, home economist and instructor at College of Southern Idaho, and Nancy Joy Jones, food columnist for The Times-News.

Wamsley was a Twin Falls County Home Extension agent for five years and taught at O'Leary Junior High School for two years. She received her bachelor and master's degrees from the University of Idaho.

Jones has been The Times-News' food columnist for 18 months. An enthusiastic cook and collector of cookbooks, recipes and cooking gadgets, she also accompanies her husband to food shows throughout the world. She received a journalism degree from the University of Idaho.

Judges for the preliminary round, in which the top three finishers in each category will be selected, are Jones and food and nutrition writers Joan Bean and Kristin Tucker.

All recipes submitted to the contest will be published Nov. 21 in a special section of the Times-News, called "1985 Holiday Cookbook."

All entries must be at least partially the creation of the entrants and should be related to the special cooking and entertaining done during the holiday season.

Cooks may send in up to three recipes. Each recipe must be submitted in one of eight categories:

- Appetizers, hors d'oeuvres, canapes, snacks or any pre-meal or between-meal item.
- Salads, side dishes only, no main-course entrees.
- Vegetables, side dishes only.
- Main dishes, any main course dish, including entrees built on meat or pasta, casseroles.
- Desserts, usually something cut and served on a plate, such as cakes, pies, puddings or souffles.
- Breads, yeast or unleavened, may be whole wheat or sweet breads, includes holiday breads.
- Candies, all confectionary items.
- Light foods, any favorite recipe that is low in calories, fat or sodium, or specifically for special diets.

The recipes may not have been ones previously submitted to any recipe contest previously sponsored by The Times-News.

Innovative recipes ease dieting blues

By JOAN BEAN
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — For a person on a diet, shedding the last 10 pounds can be a slow process. Yvonne Keltner will attest to that.

She has taken off 20 pounds since August but is now losing at the rate of about one pound a week. However, "that's not good enough," she says.

"I would ask him to eat more," she says. "He said I was using him for a garbage can."

Keltner says she is also learning to cook without salt, fat or sugar. She has read quite a bit of literature on the subject and has a gourmet diet cookbook, which shows how to make this quite palatable.

The Keltners are both retired, and she says, at this time of life it is more difficult to lose weight.

"You actually need less food, and you have the tendency to serve the same amounts and types of foods that you have eaten all your life," she says. "It is too much, because you lead a rather sedentary life."

She does miss eating pastries and other high-calorie foods, but says her counselor at a professional diet organization is working with her on this. "I have to learn to forget about it," she says.

Before a trip to the opera in Boise recently, she considered eating something off the diet while up there. Her counselor advised against it, telling her to have a salad instead, which she did. "I'm willing to follow the rules," she says.

To help the diet along, her mornings are filled with exercise. She does aerobics with a TV program, rides a stationary bicycle about five miles and she and Hubert walk a mile. If they decide on a second mile, it is done at night.

She says she thinks exercise is very important, "because, if you sit all day long and read — even if you eat less — you still don't burn up the calories like you do when you exercise.

"For instance, I try to exercise before a meal, because that speeds up your metabolism, and you burn up more calories with your next meal," she says. "They don't just sit there and get absorbed."

Starting an exercise program is the hardest part, she says, and one has to be in the proper frame of mind and be totally committed to it.

1 egg
1½ cups buttermilk

Stir together whole wheat flour, all-purpose flour, cereal, baking powder, soda and coriander. Toss apples with 1 tablespoon of the flour mixture. Set aside.

In large mixing bowl, beat oil, sugar and egg until well combined. Add buttermilk and lemon peel. Beat well. Add flour mixture, stirring just until moistened. Fold in apples. Spread in greased 9x5x3-inch loaf pan.

Bake at 350 degrees about 50 minutes or until tests done. Cool 10 minutes. Remove from pan. Cool completely. Yield: 1 loaf, 15 slices. Per serving (1 slice): 170 calories, 2.2 g dietary fiber.

GOLDEN APPLE DESSERT

2 tablespoons orange juice
⅓ cup firmly packed brown sugar, divided
2 teaspoons ground cinnamon, divided
6 cups (5 to 6, about 2 lb.) sliced Golden Delicious apples (do not pare)
½ cup All-Bran cereal
¼ cup dry bread crumbs
3 tablespoons margarine or butter, softened
1 teaspoon grated orange peel

Stir together orange juice, 1 tablespoon sugar and 1 teaspoon cinnamon. Mix with apples. Place in 9x1½-inch round fluted baking dish. Combine remaining sugar, cinnamon and all remaining ingredients with fork. Sprinkle over apple mixture. Bake at 375 degrees for 30 to 40 minutes or until topping is crisp and apples are tender. If necessary, cover during last few minutes of baking time to prevent over browning. Serve warm. Yield: 6 servings. Per serving: 215 calories, 6.5 g dietary fiber.

NUTTY BRAN AND RAISIN FILLED APPLES

4 medium-sized (about 1½ lb.) Golden Delicious apples
¼ cup All-Bran cereal
3 tablespoons firmly packed brown sugar
2 tablespoons raisins
2 tablespoons chopped pecans
1 tablespoon margarine or butter, softened
1 teaspoon grated lemon peel

Combine remaining ingredients; mix well. Fill apple cavities. Place in 8-inch square glass baking dish. Cover with waxed paper. Microcook at high for 9 to 10 minutes or until tender. Rotate dish ¼ turn after 5 minutes. Serve warm. Top with plain yogurt, if desired. Yield: 4 servings.

APPLE SLICE BRAN MUFFINS

½ cup whole wheat flour
¾ cup all-purpose flour
1 tablespoon baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
½ cup firmly packed brown sugar
¼ teaspoon ground cinnamon
1½ cups All-Bran cereal
1¼ cups milk
1 egg
¼ cup vegetable oil
2 medium-sized (about ¾ lb.) Golden Delicious apples

Cinnamon-sugar mixture: 1 teaspoon cinnamon/1 tablespoon sugar.

Stir together whole wheat flour, all-purpose flour, baking powder, salt, sugar and cinnamon. Set aside.

Measure cereal and milk into large mixing bowl. Stir to combine. Let stand 1 to 2 minutes or until cereal is softened. Add egg and oil. Beat well.

Add flour mixture, stirring just until moistened. Portion batter evenly into 12 greased 2½-inch muffin-pan cups. Core apples and cut in half. Cut each half into ¼-inch slices. Toss with cinnamon-sugar mixture. Press narrow edge of 2 slices into top of each muffin. Sprinkle remaining cinnamon-sugar over tops.

tion on the cheese spreads, and, like the above, it can be prepared way ahead (up to two weeks) of when you plan on serving it.

CHEESE CHUTNEY SPREAD

12 to 16 ounces sharp cheddar cheese
1 tablspoon commercial curry powder
2 ounces dry or cooking sherry bottle of commercial chutney (peach is recommended)
3 to 4 green onions, sliced thin

Bring the cheeses to room temperature and cube and blend in a food processor or by hand. Add the curry powder and sherry and blend well.

Shape the mixture into a round disk (maybe two smaller ones) about 1-inch thick and wrap in plastic wrap and refrigerate.

This recipe was shared by a friend and I really appreciate it. I also would like to thank those of you that have written or called and keep encouraging me. It's really nice to know someone cares. Enjoy!

Dutch create great cheeses

By TOM HOGE
Associated Press

As a longtime cheese buff, I have in my travels sampled the products of many lands, including English Stilton, French Camembert, German Limburger and the classical Swiss.

But in my opinion, the nation which leads the field is the Netherlands, the little country which has become a major exporter of these milk products, with an annual total of some 307,000 tons. This comes to almost 25 percent of the total cheese exports of all nations.

The Dutch make dozens of cheeses, from Leiden, seasoned with caraway seeds, to Frisian, spiced with cloves. But the undisputed leaders in the field are Edam and Gouda, which alone account for the annual export of some 250,000 tons to about 100 countries.

2 tablespoons dry vermouth

Wash chicken and dry thoroughly with paper towel. Rub all over with 1 teaspoon oil. Sprinkle evenly with onion powder and ground pepper. Place in non-stick shallow baking pan. Bake in preheated oven, uncovered, for 20 minutes. Meanwhile, combine and have ready: orange juice concentrate, vermouth, remaining teaspoon of oil and paprika.

After chicken has baked 20 minutes, dribble with half of orange mixture, turning and basting with pan juices. Return to oven and bake for 15 minutes. Dribble with balance of orange mixture, turning and basting with pan juices and bake for 15 minutes more. Total cooking time 50 minutes. Finished chicken will be golden brown.

"It's very low in calories and just the right portion, which would amount to one drumstick and a thigh. It's very tasty," she says.

HERBED PORK IN CRUST

4 generous servings or 6 smaller
½ cup chopped onion
1 clove garlic, minced
1½ cup water
1 envelope chicken instant broth
1 teaspoon salt
Dash pepper
½ teaspoon ground savory
½ teaspoon rubbed sage
1 bay leaf
Mushrooms to taste (optional)
Frozen green peas, to taste
3 cups cut up celery
1 package frozen ready-to-bake puff pastry (sheets) thawed
1 egg white

Cook pork in large skillet over high heat until well browned, stirring occasionally. Push pork to one side. Add onions and garlic. Saute 1 minute. Add water, soup mix, salt, pepper, savory, sage and bay leaf. Bring to boiling. Cover and cook over low heat 30 minutes. Discard bay leaf. Add celery. Cook 15 minutes.

Heat oven to 450 degrees. Roll out the puff pastry to a 16x12-inch rectangle. Trim to fit a 2 quart oval shallow baking pan. Cut out pastry with a pastry wheel or sharp knife to fit top of dish. Spoon pork mixture into dish and set aside. Cut out center of pastry to let steam escape during baking. Cut pastry scraps into little pieces. Brush pastry with egg white. Place pastry, coated side down, over pork mixture. Then place pastry scraps around the edge. Brush the whole top with egg white. Bake 15 minutes, until golden. Note: If this is prepared a day ahead and refrigerated, bake 30 minutes or more.

Keltner hopes to be off the diet and on a maintenance program, by Thanksgiving.

"And then I can have some turkey, but no gravy, of course, and no sweet potatoes and no pie," she says.

She and Hubert have been invited to friends' home for the occasion, and she plans to take along, but not to eat, the following:

SHERRIED SWEET POTATO CASSEROLE

8 medium sweet potatoes or three 18-ounce cans of sweet potatoes
1 cup brown sugar
2 tablespoons corns starch
½ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon shredded orange peel
2 cups orange juice
½ cup raisins
6 talbespoons butter
⅓ cup dry sherry
¼ cup chopped walnuts

Cut potatoes in pieces and place in a 13½-inch oval baking dish. Sprinkle with a little salt. In saucepan, combine brown sugar, cornstarch and the ½ teaspoon salt. Blend in orange peel and juice. Add raisins. Cook and stir over medium heat until thickened and bubbly. Cook one minute more. Add butter, sherry and walnuts, stirring until butter is melted.

Pour over potatoes. Bake in 325 degree oven for 30 minutes or until potatoes are well glazed, basting occasionally. Makes 8 servings.

Serve turkey French-style

By TOM HOGE
Associated Press

In France, roast turkey is served stuffed with a mixture of ground meats, herbs, bread crumbs and cognac. Some French chefs also add whole chestnuts and foie gras or truffles.

Here's a recipe for Roast Turkey, Normandy style.

2 pounds apples, such as pippins
Juice of 1 lemon
1 turkey, about 10 pounds, boned and rolled by butcher
Salt and pepper
Thyme to taste
5 tablespoons butter
1 cup apple cider

Peel and quarter apples. Remove cores and halve each quarter. Place apple slices in a bowl and sprinkle at once with lemon juice to prevent turning brown. Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Sprinkle turkey with salt, pepper and thyme. Heat butter in a stewing pot until lightly browned, and sear turkey a few minutes on each side until golden. Remove meat and set aside. Lower heat under stewing pot to low-medium. Add sliced apples and brown for five minutes, turning carefully every 30 seconds with a wooden spoon. Remove half the apples and line bottom of an oval baking dish. Place turkey on top and, cover, including sides, with rest of the apples. Pour cider into stewing pot and scrape bottom of pot with wooden spoon to loosen all browned particles. Simmer for two minutes over low heat. Pour cider over turkey and apples. Cover with a aluminum foil and roast at 350 degrees for 50 minutes, or until done.

Winner of groceries contest adds coupon savings to prize

By MARTIN SLOANE
United Feature Syndicate

Supermarket shopper

Dear Martin — About a month ago, I was the winner of $100 worth of groceries in a contest sponsored by 7-Up. This, by itself, was something to cheer about, but I decided to see if my coupons could increase my winnings.

They did. When my purchases were rung up, they came to well over $100, but when the coupons were deducted, I was within a dollar of my 7-Up certificate. I walked out of the supermarket with almost $120 worth of free groceries! What do you think of that? — Elbertine Natrillo, East Haven, Conn.

Dear Elbertine — You know it and I know it — if you are walking into a food store for any reason, don't forget to take your coupons! Congratulations on being a double winner!

Dear Martin — Our local Safeway store refused to honor a Pepsi coupon when I recently purchased a six-pack. The coupon was for 25 cents off a 2-liter bottle or multipack. The supermarket cashier said that multipack meant a 12-pack carton. I tried to explain to her that the cans in the six-pack contain a total of 72 ounces, more than the 67.6 ounces in the 2-liter bottle.

My explanation did no good. I would appreciate your opinion. — Delight Sturgeon, Lander, Wy.

Dear Delight — I spoke to the people at Pepsi headquarters, and they agree with you. Any purchase of a multipack of six or 12 cans should qualify for the redemption of the Pepsi coupon.

When a question like this comes up at the checkout counter and you are not satisfied with the way the transaction is being handled, ask to see the head cashier or the store manager.

Dear Martin — One of my proudest refunding accomplishments was with the Kraft-Corningware snack-dish offer. I saved enough Kraft proofs of purchase to send for 17 sets.

It cost $1.25 in postage to send the proofs to Kraft, and it was more than worth the time and expense. Each set was worth $12.95, and they made wonderful Christmas gifts. — Margaret Parcells, W. Palm Beach

Dear Margaret — Your letter is a reminder that there is still time to check the supermarkets for manufacturers' mail-in forms that offer gift items in return for proofs of purchase. As the holidays draw closer, you can fill out the mail-in form using the name and address of the person who is to receive the gift.

Catfish sausage to be tested; corn cats are next

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — It looks, smells and tastes something like pork sausage, but the critter it's made from never squealed or oinked, never had ears or a curly tail or even feet, and didn't grow up in a litter.

This sausage is made of quite a different Southern delicacy — catfish. And "cat dogs" and "corn cats" and other catfish products are in the planning stages.

Later this month, consumers here and in Dallas will get a chance to taste catfish sausage when Delta Industries Inc. stocks the shelves of a handful of Jitney Jungle and Kroger stores to test market the frozen patties, Delta President Thomas Slough said Tuesday.

The sausage tastes something like its pork competitor, but is lower in cholesterol, fat and calories, he said. It will be sold in 12-ounce, eight-patty packages under the brand name Leroy's, and will cost about the same as high-grade pork sausage.

Each 1½-ounce catfish sausage patty has 76 calories, compared to about 200 calories in the same size pork patty.

"We're targeting our products to the health food market," said Slough.

Consisting only of catfish, pepper, sage and other spices, the sausage contains no preservatives, which requires the company to freeze it to keep it fresh.

Privately held Delta Industries refined the recipe for catfish sausage after researchers at Mississippi State University came up the idea and two Jackson restaurateurs perfected it.

Store taste tests and follow-up interviews with consumers will be conducted to see if distribution will be expanded, Slough said.

The sausage planned for testing will be mild, but spicy variations are being developed, including smoked catfish sausage links and a super spicy "red hot" link which might be called a "hot cat," he said.

Then there are "cat dogs" or "corn cats," a catfish weiner on a stick dipped in hush-puppy batter, a fishy version of the corn dog.

Slough said Delta Industries is developing 15 to 20 catfish food products it hopes will replace conventional ingredients in some foods, much like the turkey ham and other turkey products that have taken a share of the market.

Woodstove cooking has nostalgic taste

By COUNTRY COOKING
A Hearst Magazine

Good cooks are rediscovering great-grandma's woodburning cookstove that produces delicious baked goods and helps cut gas and electric bills.

There's a special taste to foods cooked on a woodstove, according to an article in the autumn issue of Country Cooking. And the stoves are easy to use once you learn how to build fires and where to place your pots for best results.

Wood stoves, which date back to the mid-19th century, are best for breads, pies, cobblers and cookies. They don't work well for foods that require precise temperatures because you can't adjust the heat quickly and sometimes you must interrupt cooking to add more fuel.

Woodburning stoves can burn either wood or coal. Coal is longer-burning than even the best hardwood and burns more evenly, so it works especially well for large amounts of food.

Wood is best for quick meals, or if you don't want the stove to heat up the house. And the good wood smell and flavor seem to cook right into the food.

Whether you are burning wood or coal, all ranges operate on the same basic principle, as Lynda Moultrie writes in "The Antique Kitchen Range Bible."

The most important thing to learn is draft and damper control. Keep all dampers and drafts in good working order and learn to egulate them, and your stove will work at top capacity.

It is important to remember that on a wood-coal range the whole range is hot. It is very easy to burn yourself. Keep potholders handy — the glove kind that go up your arm — and never touch pot handles or any part of the range with bare hands.

As a safety precaution, also keep an ABC chemical fire extinguisher nearby.

Cast iron cookware is ideal for cookstoves, but any pots and pans without plastic or wood parts can be used. Copper-bottomed pans are not a good choice because the copper will tarnish rapidly.

Cooking on top of the range is a matter of moving your pots and pans around to different parts of the rangetop for different types of cooking.

The portion over the firebox is the hottest so it is best for quick cooking. Food will come to a boil or fry quickly when placed here. A cast iron frying pan here makes a good wok for quick-stirring vegetables and sauces. This is also the easiest spot for burning food.

If food is burning or cooking too fast, move it to the middle of the range and cooking will slow. The middle range is best for slow cooking, while the far end — away from the firebox — is used for simmering and gives you crockpot-type cooking with little or no stirring.

For cooking inside the oven, you need an oven thermometer. The gauge in the door only tells you how hot the door is.

In baking, because the side of the oven nearest the firebox is hottest, you must sometimes turn bread, cookies and pies.

Hollywood Cafe's fried dill pickles give a Southern accent to catfish

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press

DEAR CECILY: I've heard that fried pickles, served with catfish, are a specialty of the Hollywood Cafe in Hollywood, Miss. I want to give a fish fry for a neighborhood party and would appreciate a recipe for the fried pickles. They sound like an unusual relish which would be interesting and amusing to serve. — CURIOUS.

DEAR CURIOUS: Because I had never heard of fried dill pickles I asked an acquaintance of mine who is particularly interested in regional Southern dishes to research the subject. She reports that according to the Center for Southern Folklore in Memphis, Tenn., fried dill pickles are indeed served at Mississippi's Hollywood Cafe. In fact, they originated there. Here is the recipe she ferreted out. — C.B.

FRIED DILL PICKLES

2 large egg yolks
1 cup water
1½ cups all-purpose flour
32-ounce jar dill pickles, well drained
Oil for frying

Beat together egg yolks and water until blended. Gradually beat in flour, keeping the batter smooth, but not over-beating.

Trim ends from pickles. Slice ¼-inch thick. Dry well on paper towels.

Dip pickle slices into batter and fry, without crowding, in the hot oil until slightly browned. Remove and drain on paper towels. Serve at once.

Crispier sauces for fall use mild to highly seasoned pickles

Dianthus variety well suited to region

Allen Wilson
Intermountain gardening

Each year I try to evaluate as many new flowers as possible in the Ricks College Horticulture Garden.

This past summer there were about 60 new annual flowers in the trial. Although virtually all of these flowers had some merit, about a third of them were especially well adapted to our Intermountain climate.

One of my favorite new flowers is Princess Dianthus. Two new colors, white and bright salmon, were added last year. Scarlet Princess and Princess Mix have been available for a year or two. Flower colors are brighter than many other Dianthus varieties.

They bloom early and continue to bloom all summer long. Although sold as annuals, most plants will survive our cold winters and bloom again the next year.

A new group of Crown pansies has been very impressive this summer. I planted four different colors, Golden Crown, White Crown, Blue Crown and Azure Crown (sky blue). The large flowers had bright, clear colors without dark centers or faces. They were more uniform and heavier blooming than most other pansies.

Of the new petunias, I was most impressed with Velvet Frost. It has deep burgandy flowers with a uniform white rim. It has the same uniform bicolor pattern of Blue Frost and Cherry Frost, which have been two of my favorites.

A new Galliardia with double flowers, named Lollipops, was very attractive. It grows about 16 inches high and is covered with round, ball shaped flowers in shades of yellow, orange and maroon red.

The only All-America award winning flower for next year (1986) is Sunny Red Cosmos. We planted a preview sample this past summer. It grows about knee height with informal daisy-like flowers of bright red, which fade to a deep orange.

Several new geranium varieties are introduced each year. Two of the best new series are the Century and Diamond varieties. The Century series has larger flowers than many other geraniums on compact, 16 inch plants. The Diamond geraniums do not have as large flowers as Century, but produce more of them. Rose Diamond was an All-America winner last year.

I planted nine new marigolds. I was most impressed with Yellow Fireworks, Red Marietta, Hero Red and Sophia Mix. Yellow Fireworks is a very floriferous medium size yellow. Red Marietta is a large, single maroon red, fading to orange. Hero Red is a dwarf, double, deep maroon red; the deepest red of any marigold. Sophia Mix is a dwarf strain with medium size, double flowers in a wide color range.

All of these varieties are new, which means they probably will not be available on ordinary seed racks. The best source for seed will be some of the larger mail order catalogs, like Burpee, Park and Stokes. Some of the more progressive nurseries and greenhouses may grow plants, especially if you tell them you are interested this winter while they still have time to obtain seed.

Autumn is ideal time to plant berry-bearers

By EARL ARONSON
Associated Press

The hardy holly bordering our front lawn is thriving this year and its berries will soon turn bright red, in time for Christmas and other holiday decorations. Autumn is a good time to consider planting trees and shrubs that produce colorful, attractive berries.

Among other plants producing colorful fall berries are hawthorn, pyracantha, crabapple, bittersweet, euonymus and viburnum.

The Washington hawthorn is a small tree with orange-red fruits. This variety, because of its thorns, should be pruned high or planted where the thorns are not a hazard to passersby or children.

The pyracantha, also known as firethorn, is a spreading shrub that produces large clusters of orange-red fruits along its branches. In far, northern areas it is subject to winter damage that reduces winter berry production. Pyracantha, a relative of the apple, is subject to some apple diseases, including scab, which blackens berries, and fireblight, which may cause canes to die back.

Both deciduous and evergreen hollies produce bright red berries. Male and female hollies are needed to produce berries. Two hollies that drop leaves are possum haw (Ilex decidua) and winterberry (Ilex verticillata). Winterberry is a more cold-hardy shrub; possum haw forms a small tree but is less winter-hardy. Birds enjoy holly berries.

Among hardier hollies are American, Foster's hybrids or Rugosa.

Crabapple fruits are colorful. Yellow and red varieties in several sizes are available. Don't plant them close to walks or patios where dropping fruit can be a nuisance.

Bittersweet is a twining vine often found growing naturally on farm fences or trees. It needs space to climb and both male and female plants are needed for berry production. Don't let it climb valuable trees because it will twine around branches and kill them as the vines tighten and enlarge.

There are other berry plants that produce purplish and deep blue fruits.

Leaf Fall in Fall

When the autumn leaves fall pick up your rake and clean up debris in your yard and garden. You'll be saving your plants from some disease problems next year. Plant-disease fungi may already inhabit leaves and dead or drying twigs, or they may move in and overwinter there.

Dill pickle flavors put crisp in fall barbecues

Barbecuing, an all-American tradition, is a terrific fall activity. Ball games, special events and the cooler air call for a good fire and hearty food.

Here are some ways to make your fall barbecue reflect the crispness of the season. By using distinctive dill pickle flavors, you can create a number of unique barbecue sauces from essentially the same formula.

These rich, tomato-based sauces vary according to the kind of dill pickle you choose to add. Vlasic has four distinctive flavors — Kosher, No Garlic, Polish and new Zesty Dill. These pickles, with mild to zesty seasonings, can be combined with other foods to create four quite different barbecue sauces. In developing its new Zesty Dill pickle, Vlasic discovered that a large number of consumers really wanted a more highly seasoned dill pickle. You, too, might try a range of mild to snappy barbecue sauces this fall.

Each pickle variety is easily recognized by the jar's distinguished color band. Also, on the bottom of each dill pickle label is a matching seasoning scale from 1 to 4, from mild to highly seasoned.

Basting is an important part of barbecuing technique. It adds flavor to any grilled or broiled food while it seals in the juices. For succulent chicken, baste it with the Crispy Fall Barbecue Sauce or any of its snappier variations.

Although they taste quite different, these sauces are quick and easy to make. Just saute onions; add tomato sauce, brown sugar, pickles and flavorings; then simmer for five minutes.

For the tastiest barbecue foods, brush on the sauce during the last 15 minutes of cooking. This will allow you to taste the sauce and meat separately. Basting in the last minutes is especially important when using a sugar or tomato-based sauce. They burn off the food long before the meat is cooked.

CRISPY FALL BARBECUE SAUCE

2 tablespoons salad oil
¼ cup chopped onion
1 can (15 ounces) tomato sauce
⅓ cup brown sugar
¼ cup chopped dill pickles

In a 2-quart saucepan over medium heat, in hot oil, cook onion until tender. stir in remaining ingredients. Heat to boiling; reduce heat to low. Simmer 5 minutes to blend flavors. Use to baste chicken, beef or spareribs during grilling or broiling. Makes 2½ cups.

Western look hits decorating

By BARBARA MAYER
Associated Press

A recent informal survey of New York City restaurants turned up at least five with menus and decor based on the American West. This fall, an American furniture company introduced a 24-piece collection based on the West, and Tex-Mex cooking has been identified as one of the hottest trends in fast food.

Even Western movies are back in fashion, says Mary Emmerling of "American Country West," a new decorating and source book. The author, who has been identified with American country decorating, about which she wrote several books, sees a difference between country and Western decorating.

Both styles are informal and rustic and feature lots of white on walls and ceilings as well as folk arts and crafts. "However, the textures are quite different, and Western country furniture is usually oversized and comfortable. The textures are rough as in adobe, stucco and animal hides and baskets," she said.

Even the accessories are outsize. Antlers are often mounted over the fireplace or exterior of the house; rough animal hides may be slung over the arm of a sofa, placed on the floor or hung on the walls and American Indian woven rugs, pottery and baskets are often decorative elements.

Emmerling says she expects this style of decoration to grow in the coming years, an opinion borne out by the introduction in October of a large new furniture collection by Lane Co. Lane and the Museum of American Folk Art collaborated on the collection of Western-style furniture, which includes characteristic wood pieces brought by immigrants from Germany, France and Mexico who came directly to the West. The furniture was introduced at the recent furniture market in North Carolina.

According to Dr. Robert Bishop, director of the museum, interest in the American West has two major sources. The distinctive color palette was popularized by the use of desert colors in makeup.

What do single cooks need? A few good, reliable dishes

By CAROLE SUGARMAN
The Washington Post

One single cook claims that the most efficient way to eat dinner is standing up. In front of the refrigerator. Sans silverware.

This habit, a hallmark of other single cooks, works on the tenets that a sit-down dinner requires cooking and cleaning up dishes and that lasagna and Chinese restaurant leftovers taste better cold anyway.

What all single cooks need are a few dishes in their repertoires that can be prepared on a Sunday afternoon-and-made in portion sizes to last for three or four evenings.

This eliminates the temptation of cheese and crackers for a main course. And although it may facilitate the penchant for stand-up dining, at least it will be more elegant than peanut butter.

Pasta casseroles and stews are obvious types of dishes that can be eaten cold or that taste even better in the days following preparation. A hearty soup or a pot of chili made on a raw Sunday afternoon is a soothing antidote for the day and the week ahead. Roasted chicken or turkey parts can take on different guises during the week, as a salad, made into a hash with diced potatoes and carrots, or sliced into a black bread sandwich with a dab of chutney and thin slices of apple.

Artist Karen Brown often cooks up a pot of grain, such as rice, millet or kasha, that will serve as the base for dishes during the week. Brown will spike the grain with almonds and raisins and perhaps season it with cayenne, black pepper, cumin, thyme or tarragon, chopped parsley or watercress, sesame or sunflower seeds.

The grain will then be reheated as an accompaniment to stir-fried vegetables, with a dash of tamari, or Brown will saute some vegetables with a dash of curry and serve them with the rice, millet or kasha and a side dish of yogurt and diced cucumber. Soups and casseroles are also good vehicles for additional overlapping slices of muenster cheese. Cover the bottom of the pan and three-quarters of the way up the sides. Combine cooked and drained spinach with cottage cheese, eggs, onion, parmesan, dill and pepper. Place in pie plate. Cook in a 350 degree oven for 1 hour. Allow to stand for 5 minutes before slicing. Regan eats this pie cold, reheated or sliced and slipped into pita bread for lunch the next day.

Single cook Diane Boratyn makes a massive quantity of chicken broth at the beginning of the week, cooking a stewing chicken with parsnips, carrots, onions, celery, parsley, bay leaf, allspice and pepper for three or more hours, then refrigerates it and skims off the fat. Boratyn then alternates eating the broth with thin egg noodles, chunks of chicken or vegetables, such as broccoli florets.

Or alternately, she will steam a pound and a half of shrimp (not that expensive, she says, considering the amount of meals she gets from it). Then during the week, Boratyn will eat the shrimp cold, dipped in bottled miso or a soy-based marinade or with homemade cocktail sauce.

Here are some all-week-long dishes from single cooks. And if you must, most of them can be eaten cold, standing up, in front of the refrigerator.

CLAIRE REGAN'S SPINACH PIE WITH MUENSTER CRUST

3-4 pound sliced muenster cheese
3 10-ounce packages frozen spinach, cooked and drained well
1 cup low-fat cottage cheese
3 eggs, beaten
1 small onion, chopped
1-3 cup grated parmesan or less to taste
Dill and freshly ground black pepper to taste

Line a 10-inch pie plate with overlapping slices of muenster cheese. Cover the bottom of the pan and three-quarters of the way up the sides. Combine cooked and drained spinach with cottage cheese, eggs, onion, parmesan, dill and pepper. Place in pie plate. Cook in a 350 degree oven for 1 hour. Allow to stand for 5 minutes before slicing. Regan eats this pie cold, reheated or sliced and slipped into pita bread for lunch the next day.

LOUISE'S EASY BRISKET

(4 servings)

3 medium onions, coarsely chopped
2 cups tomato sauce
2 1-2- to 3-pound brisket, trimmed
Salt and pepper to taste

Place onions and tomato sauce in a dutch oven. Allow to simmer for 10 minutes. Season brisket with salt and pepper. Place brisket in dutch oven and cover. Simmer for 3 to 3 1-2 hours. Check periodically during cooking to make sure brisket does not stick to bottom of pot. You may also need to add water. Turn meat over every 1-2 hour. Remove meat and cool before slicing. Reserve gravy. Serve reheated with gravy, cold, or on rye bread with a spread of horseradish mixed with yogurt or sour cream.

'Miami Vice' duo could take a bite out of Cuban cookery

By CANDY SAGON
Dallas Times Herald

They blast away the bad guys, wear clothes most cops cannot afford, and manage to press the flesh with at least one good-looking woman in each episode. But when do these guys eat?

TV's sexy "Miami Vice" duo spend an infinitesimal time on nutrition. Just because the city is overrun with drug-infested scum of the earth does not excuse Crockett and Tubbs from making their meals out of bad coffee, vending machine cigarettes and little else.

How will they ever keep their energy level up on such a paltry diet? Without proper nourishment, won't their expensive designer clothes start to look baggy?

It is easy to eat well in Miami, a city with a plethora of Caribbean and Cuban restaurants serving hearty, spicy food. Because our daring duo apparently has not found time to check out the local cuisine, we have compiled a list of suggestions for them:

On the run after a bunch of reprobates? It will not take a minute to stop in for the Cuban version of a hero sandwich; a crusty loaf packed with salami, cheese, ham, sliced pork and pickles.

Need a light but nourishing lunch before a busy evening? Try conch chowder, thick with bits of tender conch and chunks of potato in a spicy tomato stock.

Skipped breakfast during an argument with Lt. Castillo? Stoke up your energy with what the Cubans call Moors and Christians (black beans and white rice).

Want a big blowout dinner to celebrate the latest bust? Order up some paella, the famous rice and seafood dish, and top it off with a light flan for dessert.

And when things are a little tame on the crime scene, how about a spicy dish of picadillo, a combination of spicy ground meat, raisins and olives that is often called Cuban hash.

For you law-abiding citizens who would like to try some spicy Cuban dishes at home, here are some recipes:

CUBAN BLACK BEANS

1 pound dry black beans (or equivalent amount of canned black beans; if canned are used, eliminate soaking and long cooking directions)
2 onions
2 green peppers
Oil or lard
3 cloves garlic, crushed
1-2 teaspoon ground cumin
1 bay leaf
1-2 cup canned tomato sauce
Salt
1 tablespoon wine vinegar
Olive oil
Chopped onion

Wash beans and soak overnight in heavy saucepan with enough water to come to 2 inches over beans. Cut 1 onion and 1 green pepper in halves and add to beans. Bring beans and soaking water to boil, cover and simmer 1 1-2 hours, or until beans are tender. Heat 5 tablespoons oil in skillet. Chop remaining onion and green pepper and add with garlic to skillet. Cook until onion is translucent and golden. Add cumin and bay leaf and cook, stirring, 5 minutes. Add tomato sauce and cook 5 minutes longer. Remove bay leaf and place mixture in blender container. Blend until smooth and add to beans. If sauce is too thick, add more water. Season to taste with salt. Remove and discard onion and green pepper halves and simmer until flavors blend and sauce thickens slightly. Add wine vinegar and stir. Float a little olive oil on surface of beans and let stand awhile before serving. Accompany beans with chopped onion, if desired. Serves 8.

Dietary figures release delayed

By ROSE DOSTI
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Revised Recommended Dietary Allowance figures, the nutritional vitamin and mineral yardsticks on which a healthful diet is based, will not be released as expected now or in the near future. Changes from the latest review of the figures, made in 1980, originally were slated for release this past summer.

In August, Helen Guthrie, a Penn State University nutrition professor and a member of the Dietary Allowances Committee appointed by the Food and Nutrition Board of the National Research Council, announced that the release of the new RDAs would be postponed a month.

There would be some changes from the 1980 allowances, she told dietitians and nutritionists attending the first session of the Society for Nutrition Education's annual meeting here. The changes, she said, would be in the age and sex categories for infants, adolescents and elderly, as well as some minor modifications for certain vitamins and minerals.

But then something strange happened.

The new RDAs never were released.

There was buzzing among nutrition circles that the National Research Council, which is organized by the National Academy of Sciences, could not agree on certain nutrient changes recommended by the committee.

The RDAs were established after World War II to provide a national yardstick for levels of nutrients considered desirable for almost every healthy American. They also have been a basis for federal and state food product labeling laws and food programs in prisons, schools and government hospitals and for the elderly. The allowances are also the nutritional bible for dietitians and other practitioners who work in hospitals, institutions and the food industry.

Guthrie said: "Basically, we submitted our report to the National Academy of Sciences. They had some recommendations, and the anonymous review committee had some recommendations for modification. We agreed on everything but vitamins A and C. We simply couldn't reach agreement on these two nutrients or they did not accept our compromise. So they decided not to publish anything at all.

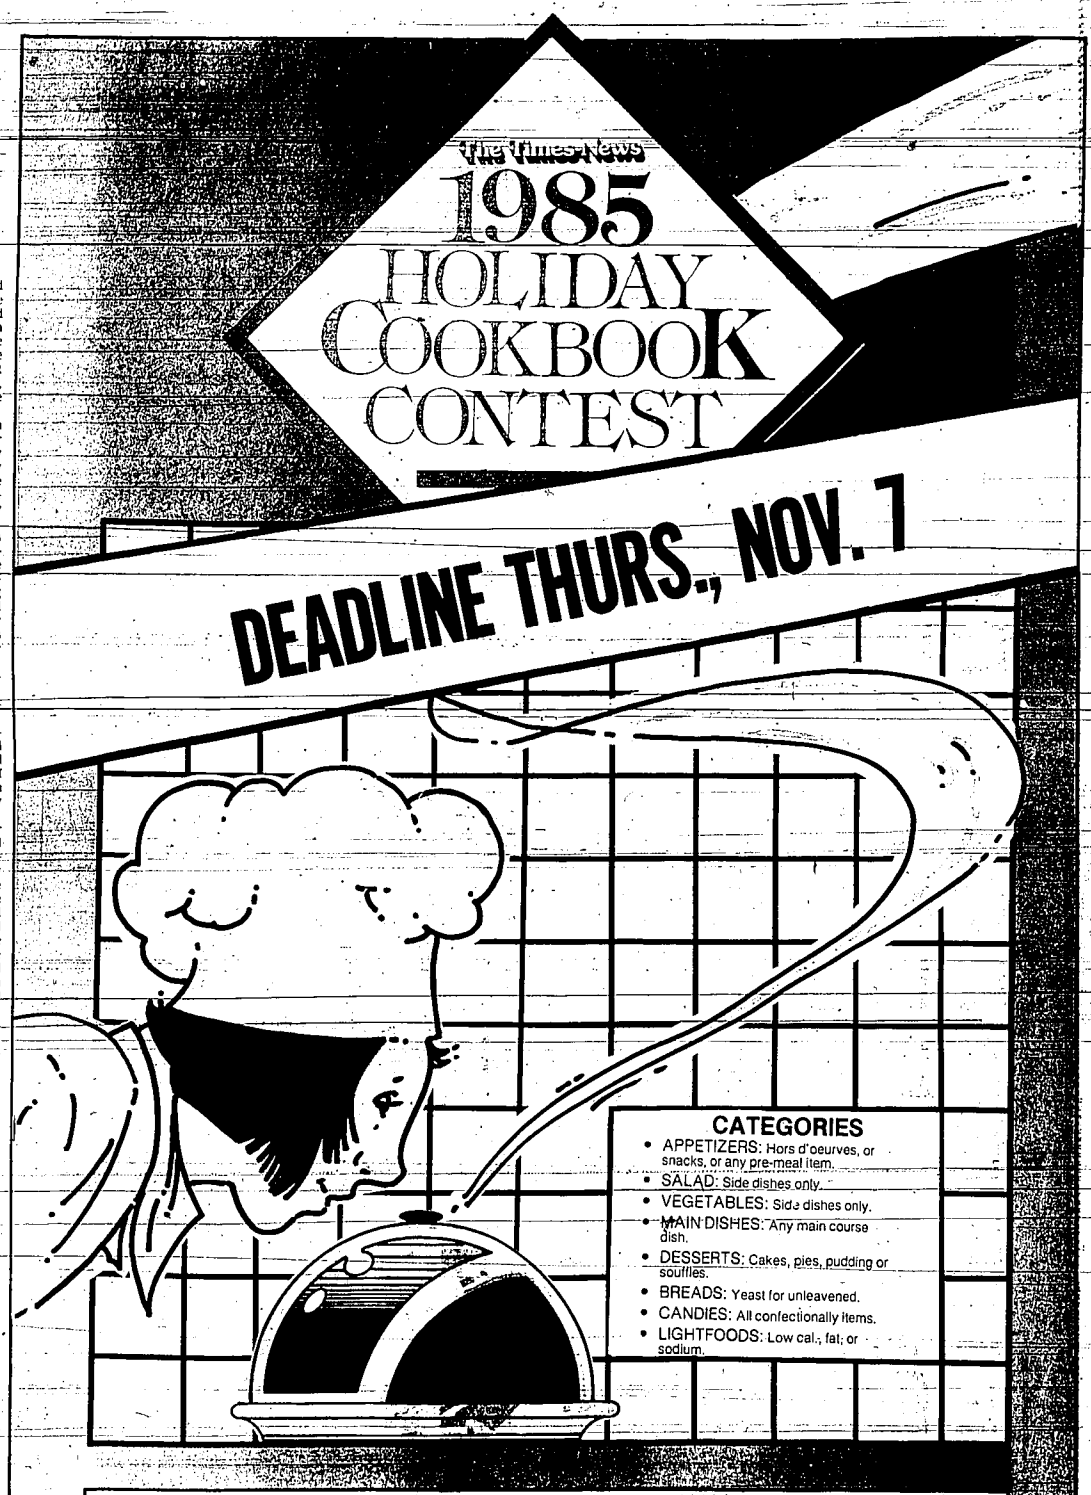
"I think it is unfortunate that there wasn't more of an effort to resolve the compromise. The major problem is that practitioners are not going to have the benefit of the thinking of the committee, who worked hard over the last five years."

European wines debut at festival

By NATHAN CHROMAN
Los Angeles Times

Wolfgang Puck of Spago's restaurant in West Hollywood, Calif., with the assistance of Tom Kaplan, Bernard Erpicum and some of America's most talented chefs, presented more than 100 of America's finer wines at the third annual American Wine and Food Festival, which benefits Meals on Wheels. For the first time European wines were offered at the festival, including Italy's Ruffino, Germany's Blue Nun and France's Moet-et-Chandon Champagne.

Because of palate limitations, I tasted only American Cabernet Sauvignons and Chardonnays. Fortunately, considering the chefs' free use of spices, garlic and chiles, the fact that the wines were young was an asset. A mature, complex, silky Cabernet probably would not have gone well with Puck's quail marinated with honey, vinegar and chiles served on corn cakes with a spicy Zinfandel sauce. Many of the robust high-tannin Cabernets showed better with such foods.



It's time for all Magic Valley cooks, from beginners to gourmets, to dust off treasured recipes and enter the Times-News Holiday Cookbook contest. All entries are due at the Times-News office, P.O. Box 548, Twin Falls, ID 83301, by 5 p.m. on Nov. 7. Cash prizes will be awarded to the first, second and third place winners, as well a grand prize winner. Recipes must be at least partially the creation of the entrants. The winning entries and other recipes submitted to the contest will be published in a special section of the Times-News on Nov. 21. Cooks may send in up to three recipes.

GRAND PRIZE $100.00
1st PRIZE $25.00
2nd PRIZE $15.00
3rd PRIZE $10.00
1st, 2nd, 3rd Prizes Will Be Awarded in Each Of The Eight Categories.

CONTEST RULES

1. Contest is open to all readers of the Times-News except Times-News employees and their immediate families.
2. Entrants may submit up to three recipes. The recipes may not have been entered previously in any recipe contest sponsored by the Times-News. Each entry must be submitted on a separate card or sheet and clearly marked for entry in one of the eight categories: appetizers, salads, vegetables, main dishes, desserts, breads, candies, lightfoods. Alternative recipes may be submitted in all categories.
3. Recipes need not be entirely original but cannot be copies from books or other publications. Each recipe must be in each entry the property of the entrant.
4. Each entry must be clear and legible, preferably typewritten. Be sure to include specifics on the ingredients, directions and yields. Entries in the light foods category should contain additional information about calories, fat, sodium, etc. Include your name, address and phone number on each entry.
5. Recipes must be submitted before 5 p.m. on Nov. 7, 1985. Three finalists in each category will be notified no later than 5 p.m. on Nov. 11. Finalists must bring a prepared recipe to the Times-News on Nov. 13 at 11 a.m. for judging by a panel. A grand prize winner and first and second place winners in each category will be announced following the taste test.
6. All entries become the property of the Times-News and may be published in the Times-News without compensation or notification to the entrant. A special section featuring recipes and winners of the contest will be published Nov. 21, 1985.
7. Judging will be based on originality, ease of preparation, appearance, nutritional value and taste. The decision of the judges will be final.

Nice guys don't always finish last.

All along, Safeway has been giving you honest deals while other supermarkets have been giving you alot of cheap talk. The truth is, no food store can honestly guarantee you the lowest prices every day on every single item. And it doesn't take long for shoppers to figure that out. At Safeway, we'd rather make promises we can keep:

- Hundreds of new Super Saver prices every week. Check our ads and look for the arrows when you shop.
- Low prices every day throughout the store.
- Manufacturer savings passed along to you.
- Quality products--name brands and store brands you can trust.
- Good selection of fresh produce, meats and dairy products.
- Seasonal savings on fresh fruits and vegetables.
- Special cuts offered at our meat counter. Just ring the buzzer to ask.
- Carry-out service available on large orders.
- Safeway guarantee that you can return any product for an exchange or refund if you are not satisfied.

The idea of getting a good honest deal must appeal to alot of shoppers, because more people shop at Safeway than any other food store in America. Which just goes to show--nice guys don't always finish last.

Bride's guest sparks groom's slow burn

Abigail VanBuren
Dear Abby

DEAR ABBY: If plans go according to schedule, I'll be married next June. I met "Julia" when I was a senior at college. She was a junior. After I graduated, I drove down to see her nearly every weekend. I live about two hours from there. We started to go steady, then I gave her an engagement ring.

One night Julia called me from college crying. She said she had fooled around with a guy I knew (I'll call him John), but she promised she would never go near him again.

She called me several times after that to say John was still "after her," but she didn't want me to do anything about it because she could handle it. Meanwhile, I was very upset after these calls.

Then one morning she called in tears to say that John had given her a ride somewhere, refused to take her home and tried to rape her, but she fought him off. I told her I was driving right down there to have it out with him, but she begged me not to, saying they have a lot of mutual friends and she didn't want any awkward feelings. She asked me for her sake to forgive and forget.

Here's the payoff: Julia put John on her guest list for our wedding! I told her I couldn't stand the sight of that guy and I didn't want him anywhere near us on our wedding day. She says he's a good friend to all her friends and she can't leave him out. I am ready to tell Julia if she wants to marry me, she can't invite John. Am I wrong?

— END OF ROPE

DEAR END: No! Why your fiancee would even consider inviting to her wedding a man who tried to rape her is a mystery to me. Give her a choice, you or John. And if you back down and permit John to be a guest at your wedding, prepare to do a lot more forgiving and forgetting.

DEAR ABBY: Thank you for your very informative column on fire prevention. May I add one more fire hazard to the list? It's one I never would have thought of, but it nearly cost me my home.

Late one morning I smelled smoke. The last room I searched was the spare bedroom. As I entered the room, I saw the heavy drapes pulled back from the window burst into flames!

— STILL SHAKING IN WESTLAKE

DEAR STILL: Thank you for the valuable tip and your reassuring comment. Apparently a St. Louis reader was less than fired up about that column:

DEAR ABBY: Your column is one of the first things I read in the Globe-Democrat, but the one about fire prevention was very disappointing. I enjoy your column when a problem is posed and you offer a solution, but the essay on fire prevention is just not your thing and has no reader interest.

I hope you'll accept this in the constructive manner in which it is offered.

— CHUCK NORMAN, ST. LOUIS

DEAR ABBY: In response to "Dinah, Who Will Feel Much Finer When Folks in Carolina Return My China": I strongly urge those taking food to someone who is grieving to heed this suggestion: Please use disposable, non-returnable containers.

During my son's illness and subsequent death, we were given dozens of food items in "nice" containers. The last thing I needed at the time was the worry about returning the containers. It hung over my head for months, making a traumatic time even more stressful. So if you really want to make things easier for those who are grieving, send your offerings in plastic, foil or paper.

Also, please keep your cakes, and give me carrots! I put on 25 pounds eating all those "goodies." And don't tell me I should have been more careful. When you're stressed out and it's right under your nose, nibbling is normal.

— BEEN THERE IN SACRAMENTO

Poll: Visit by Britain's royal pair bit of a yawn

By LLOYD GROVE
The Washington Post

America bored silly by Chuck and Di? Say it ain't so!

But that is the conclusion that yawns forth, unstifled, from a Washington Post-ABC News poll in which Americans were asked their opinions of the Prince and Princess of Wales.

Washington and Palm Beach may have whipped themselves into a tizzy over the upcoming five-day visit of Charles and Diana. And the press has been spewing out a prelude of handy facts treating such matters as the princess' leg-waxing habits.

Of 1,506 Americans interviewed from Oct. 24 to Oct. 28 — a period when plans for the royal visit were being heralded on magazine covers at supermarket checkout stands from coast to coast — fully 67 percent said they had no opinion of the prince.
